Wayfarings.
I love all roads that have green sides of grass, Where giant purple knapweeds, dark and wild, Still nod their shaggy welcome when I pass, Above pale clover flowers, I used to think they loved me, as a child,
And though they have forgotten now, alas,
And now they only nod where once they smiled, I wander there for hours.

I love such ways as lead where no one knows—Nor cares, but I, where once the Roman trod, Where spreading hogweed stands in stately rows, Nor windbine breezes cloy, It may be fancy, or it may be God—A sense is oft times with me then that goes, Past where the larks their utmost song unload, Beyond the heights of joy.

I love all goings westward when the way Is girt about with evening: when low gleams Are yet above dim woods, and yet the day Lingers though night appears, Within my soul a yearning sadness teems, From Twilight comes it, then? From God it may,
But certain there is then with me that seems Beyond the depths of tears.

—JOHN HELSTON.

A VERY pretty, very much betrayed young girl was bewailing to me the sadness of her lot in being engaged to a man who, she said, was most distrustful and suspiciously jealous. "There was a line particularly new in her story. The man traveled and when he was away he objected to her going about with other men. Then when he was home and they were at parties together, he was always on the alert lest she talked too long or laughed too hard with other men of their crowd."

"There was one man especially for whom he cherished a violent aversion," said the girl, "and I know that at one time she and the man were very good friends. Her fiancé apparently never forgets that fact and was always afraid that the old intimacy might upset us."

"Of course," she said, "I considered herself most woefully persecuted, and misjudged, and for the moment I was sadly tempted to cry out!

"My dear little girl, don't you know that the man or woman never lived who, if they really loved, did not possess the germ of jealousy?
And if those germs were never developed it was only because of the most unusual character of the object of their affection."

But I don't say that. General statements of that kind are rather dangerous. Instead I asked her if she had ever tried covering the situation if she imagined how she would enjoy her time taking different sides on in the different town he traveled through, and furthermore if he had been much interested in a girl before he met her would she care about his availing himself of every opportunity to laugh and talk with the one-time object to his affections.

She shrugged her shoulders, thought, and said: "I wouldn't care." I knew then without her saying any more that one of two things was true. Either she did not care about the man and was marrying him for practical reasons only or she was not telling me the truth.

We are all of us awfully monogamous animals and if we are fond of a person we naturally want that person fond of us and do not care about sharing that affection with any other party. And while there is no state of mind more conducive to discomfort and misery for all concerned when it is overdeveloped than jealousy, neither is there any emotion more universally found in the marvel man or woman wholesomely in love.

I am not defending the man or woman in whom jealousy has reached the point of obsession. I'm only entering a bit of a plea in defense of that almost universal emotion under normal conditions.

When a man asks a woman to marry him the chances are ninety-nine out of a hundred that he loves her and the chances are equally good that he is going to be jealous if she gives him the slightest opportunity. And if the woman loves the man and isn't marrying for utilitarian reasons alone she will discover that jealousy is the most possible thing in the world. The destruction of her lover may keep her from ever suffering the pangs, but she will realize deep in her own heart that the field is a most fertile one should the first seeds ever be sown.

A party composed of Mr. and Mrs.
W. E. Hoagland, and their three children, Mr. and Mrs. O. S. Torry and daughter, Mrs. T. G. Leyland, returned Thursday from a delightful outing trip that embraced picture-que spots in Coos and Curry County and extended nearly to the California line. They made the trip by team, camping at night by the way.
They boast proudly of never having slept in a house during their two weeks absence. While away they attended the Agate Carnival at Port Orford and made many side trips into the hills exploring very thoroughly the Oregon Coast as far south as they went. Each and every member of the party acquired a splendid coat of tan to attest the fact of their enjoyable summer vacation trip.

Johnson's Mill at 12:30 last Sunday that made Fredrick Elmer Brain and Maude Alice Newton man and wife "so long as ye both shall live." The ceremony was performed in the presence of the members of the immediate families and a few invited friends. A sumptuous wedding dinner followed the ceremony. The bride and groom are well and favorably known in Coos county, being connected with two of the most prom-future home of the newly weds will friends of this splendid young couple
