put us on the map.

The party reached Marshfield last evening after spending yesterday afternoon and early evening seeing North Bend and meeting its citizens. They reached the Bay from Gardiner in two parties, one coming by way of the beach road and the other through the Ten Mile country. Both parties reported most enjoyable trips down to the Bay. With the exception of one or two, none of the men had before been in the southern Oregon coast country and the auto trips caused constant surprise as to the magnificent scenery found along the ing the attention of the world to Coos Bay and has done everything in her power to aid in the building up of much to this community. Now we are here to look at the work we feel we have helped to do, and to become acquainted, not only with general conditions, but with individuals, their needs and desires.

"When this excursion was an-nounced and advertised we told the people that we intended to visit a community which, with the comple-tion of the railroad, would be commercially annexed to our trading center, a territory half as large, in population, as the territory of Alaska. The people were eager to come here on the junket, and but for the unsettled market conditions our party would be several times as large as it is. You have no idea how interested the people in Portland are in this community, and to what extent they realize that their prosperity is dependent upon yours.

"Our people are in a position to do great things in the way of reduction and equalization of freight rates to and from Coos Bay, and the material advantages resulting from this source will be greatly felt by both Coos Bay and Portland."

Mr. Chapman said further that in spite of his knowledge of the big things being done in this section, he was nevertheless astounded at the completeness of the development work in all lines, and he had found the same surprise manifest among his companions. This is Mr. Chapman's first visit to Coos Bay, but he gives assurance that it will not be his last

North Bend was a visit to the steamer A. M. Simpson, where Capt. Pendergast entertained them with true deep sea hospitality.

The visitors were also taken to the scene of railroad construction on the big bridge which will span the Bay from North Bend to North Inlet, and made familiar with the plans of the raffroad company. They expressed themselves as highly pleased with the signs of progressiveness in North Bend and were also surprised at the enterprise manifested in the various lines of activity.

Addison Bennett, of the Oregeniao, is the youngest member of the party, but he keeps up his end with the veterans.
