

John Brown, Failure

Brown spent all he earned except what his wife spent for him. Consequently they never had enough laid by to get a home and so had to live in a rented house. He always worked for poor wages because necessity made him dependent. His family knocked around and "never had a chance." Home to them was a private hotel, a place to eat and sleep.

Brown admits he's a failure, but says hard luck is to blame.

Bill Jones, Success

Bill saved his money and his wife helped him. They bought a cheap lot and put up a small home and were happy as a pair of robins. In a few years Bill went into business for himself. His family are now counted among the rising generation.

The deciding point in Bill Jones' life was when he bought the lot and started his home-building.
