MY OWN DARLING.

With all thy faults I love thee
In many little ways,
Thou art the dearest, sweetest,
Who in my memory stays;
I never can forget thee,
Part of my life thou art,
My heart would soon be breaking
If I from thee should part.

I cannot live without thee,
For Oh! I love thee so,
The joy of my existence
But when with thee I know,
Life seems so sad and lonely
When thou art nowhere near
And I am filled with longing
Thy gentle voice to hear.

My soul cries out in yearning
For one I love so well,
The joy that thou canst bring me,
My heart can never tell.
No one can be so precious
Or half so dear to me
For thou art my beloved
And I belong to thee.

THE young man who has had the experience of one sweetheart and has been cut out by a luckier fellow should not pin himself down to the conviction, as he jogs along through life, that all women love alike.

Where one girl is a loving, teasing spirit, another may be equally as bashful.

Where one is a flirt, another might be only too glad to have one young man all her own, never giving a thought to another.

One girl might be voluble in expressing her sentiments toward him and another girl might be quite as fond of him—her eyes eloquently expressing that which her lips were too maidenly to utter, says Laura Jean Libbey. One girl might be influenced by his position, veering like the wind with his rise and fall in the world.

Another might cling to him, holding his love above all earthly gain. There is as much difference in the love of women as there are different women on the face of the earth. It may safely be said that there are no two lovers alike. Even the affections of twins are unlike in their object as well as manner of expressing their tender emotions.

A man should expect every girl he meets to be just the opposite from the one he courted last.

No two girls have exactly the same taste in all matters; why, then, should they be supposed to regard love through the same rosy light?

A girl's temperament has everything to do with her heart affair. Her environments have their influence as have also the influence of her friends.

The first sweetheart is not always the last. A young man may believe that he is destined to be a bachelor if one whom he thinks he likes proves false to him when he imagines that his heart has gone out to her. He may rely upon time to heal the wound, which will be found by no means deep, scarcely more than a scratch.

In looking back at old love affairs, they are like old garments of the vintage of a decade of years before. One can but laugh at their absurdities and wonder how they could ever have been so dear to us. No man should take to heart the breaking off with a girl who shows she does not care for him.

He is indeed a wise philosopher who says:
The losing of one is the gaining of two,
And the choice of a baker's dozen.

If a young girl to whom you are introduced does not invite you to call at the time of the first meeting, do not be downhearted over that.

A poor beginning in love generally ends favorably. Whereas, the girl who insists upon your calling the next evening after you have been presented to her you will find the one most likely to be entertaining half a dozen beaux upon reaching her door.

Every man should be a persistent wooer. He should not be discouraged with good endeavors, but remember the old adage, to which I add a prefix (begging pardon of the poet for same): "If you do not succeed in winning one heart, try elsewhere and again, and yet again." All's well that ends well." You will find at last the one woman whose love is like no other love.

HALLOWEEN PARTY.

Henry Albee, the 12-year-old son of H. M. Albee of Banker Hill, entertained a number of little friends at a jolly Halloween party Saturday night. The affair was greatly inspired by the fact that the small host, while collecting autumn leaves for his decorations, fell from a log, breaking both bones in his right arm. However, he was game and continued the preparations for the party. Several of the parents accompanied the children and enjoyed the evening at Five Hundred. At a late hour a hearty supper was served the guests, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. John Brockmueller, Frances, Fritz and Myrtle Brockmueller, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Butz, Mrs. Phillips, Doris and Willie Phillips, Mrs. Orr, Norman and Edith Orr, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Christensen and daughters Olga and Ina, and Logan and Moody Rushing.

YOUNG MATRONS.

The Young Matrons and a few additional guests were entertained Wednesday by Mrs. R. W. Morrow at her new residence on Central avenue. Miss Margaret Shaw, who is spending the winter with her sister, Mrs. Morrow, was present and assisted the hostess. Mrs. A. B. Gidley and Mrs. Kellough, a guest of Mrs. Jarvis, were visiting guests present as well as the regular club members, Mrs. McMillan, Mrs. Maloney, Mrs. Jarvis and Mrs. Reid. The club will meet a week from next Wednesday with Mrs. W. A. Reid.

HALLOWEEN PARTY.

On of the most original and quaint Halloween parties of the season, and one entailing the greatest mass of weird Halloween decorations, was that given last Saturday evening by Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Marhofer at their home in Bunker Hill. The entertainment lasted from 7:30 until long after midnight, great was the enjoyment of the guests in the house of mystery among wierder and very life-like guests, such as ghosts, robbers and realistic witches in Hollowe'en paraphernalia. A great diversity of entertainment was offered, including diving for walnuts containing dinner partner names in the wishing well and matching them at the big supper table and the eating of the witch's pie, cut into individual pieces containing the witch's command
