WE WHO ARE GLAD

By Mary Carolyn Davies.

We who are glad—let us join hands together,
And lift up to the sky our joyous rune,
We who have found our voyage of fair weather,
Whose years have been all June;
Let us lift up our little singing tune,
We who are glad.

We who are glad, let us not still our singing,
But scatter any sweetness we may hold;
With both hands prodigally, gay, outflinging
Our heritage of gold.
We can bring sun to corners dark and cold—
We who are glad.

We who are glad of youth, and light, and living,
We are so glad—let us give gladness, then,
Lest we forget 'tis given for our giving
Again and yet again,
Let us give out our largess to all men,
We who are glad.

We who are glad—no harm can ever sear us—
No wound pierce through our armor, sinking deep;
For gloomy fates pass by us—see, they fear us.
They know the charm we keep,
For we change toll to singing,
death to sleep.
We who are glad.

WOMEN are devout in the faith that clothes "make" them, fashionable clothes, of stylish silken texture and stylish cut.

But it is an open question as to whether men like girls who are walking fashion plates. The girl who has not much money to spend on her wardrobe often sobs and sighs that she has no chance against her well dressed sister.

The young men she knows like to take out the girls who are handsomely gowned, says Laura Jean Libbey. A man may go around with the well dressed girl for a short time, but when it comes to giving his heart he looks around for the plain, unassuming girl, for whom he realizes that beauty unadorned is adorned the most.

Fashionable clothes usually give a girl a sort of "madeup" appearance. The girl with a simple, white dotted muslin frock, sailor hat, looks what she is—nature's own and very refreshing to the eye.

The handsomest Alice blue silk or Helen pink makes even the stylish girl look decidedly uncomfortable in the Summer sun. No young girl is expected to be decked out with costly raiments in Summer. Those who go in for the fashion plate style are generally beyond the first flush of youth and are doing their best to coax youth to remain with them.

They do not trust themselves to simple garb. The maiden who has a nice, fresh complexion, soft hair, neatly arranged, bright eyes, a row of pearly teeth behind red lips, which always wear a smile, can look prettier in a $5 muslin dress than the overdressed girl in her satin sheath. A girl should be proud that she can shine in her sweet simplicity.

It is a mistake to think that men do not admire the pretty plainly gowned Summer girl. She is the one who captures love after he has gotten tired of admiring the human fashion plate.

At ball, picnic, party or hop, she is sure to look as sweet in her simplicity as any one present. Summer time is a godsend to the girl with a short purse. She need not sigh over costly hats. With a rosebud or a ribbon tucked in her curls she can often go around hatless if she likes and be the cynosure of youth's admiring eyes. It is only a certain class of men who admire the girl gotten up to the minute.

The maid with a heart in her bosom is better off without them, for they are "free-lances," who are not inclined to marry. They are simply passing time as enjoyably as they can. The fashionable girl will usually end the Summer as she began it, still single, but with the uncomfortable knowledge that, added to her loss of time in not finding a desirable husband, she has also worn out her costly furbellows and besides grown a year older.

The marrying man, if he must reckon his income closely, takes into consideration the probable cost of a girl's clothing. He reasons it out that if she expects to marry a man in his circumstances she should garb herself as would become his pocketbook. Otherwise she should be looking around for a millionaire.

Simplicity in garb is always the best, my dears, as it is in mannerism and conversation. Three wash dresses, with a bit of lace on them, is quite enough for the average Summer girl; two for every day and one for Sunday.

A man never tires of sweet simplicity in blooming womanhood, but he certainly does of an overabundance of ribbons and laces that represent a small fortune and which he knows must be perishable.

EPISCOPAL GUILD

The Marshfield Episcopal Guild entertained the members of the North Bend Guild at their meeting here Tuesday. The meeting was in charge of Mrs. A. C. Vestal, Mrs. H. Lockhart and Mrs. Harry Nas-
