YOU NEVER CAN TELL

When Claribel was five years old
Her lips were rosy and blue;
Her hair hung thick in strands of gold;
Her eyes were azure blue.
She loved to sit in father's lap;
Dolls were her special pride;
She'd kiss most any likely chap;
She almost never cried.

Her happy parents said: "Ah, well,
How blessed are we in Claribel."

When Claribel was twenty-two
Her lips were firmly set;
She was (perhaps it's plain to you)
A full-fledged suffragette.
She hated babies, loved to fight
For woman's rights, but oh!
Nobody ever held her tight
Or kissed her, horrors, no!

Her anxious parents said: "Ah, well
You never really can tell."

When Isabel was five years old
Her hair was crisp and short;
She never did, what she was told
Or looked the way she ought;
She raced, spun tops, stole jam
Climbed trees;
She hated to be kissed;
She loathed all sorts of laps and knees,
And dolls she never missed.

Her happy parents said: "Ah, well,
We'll have to watch poor Isabel."

When Isabel was twenty-two
Her suitors were galore;
And every single man she knew
Was added to her score.
She married, loved her husband and
Scorned wordy platform fights.
And yet she seemed to understand
The truth of woman's rites.

Her happy parents said: "Ah, well,
You really cannot ever tell."
—Peggy Shaw

The nightingales made musical
June's palace, paved with gold;
I watched the rose you gave me
It warm, red heart unfold.
But sight of rose and song of bird
Were fraught with vain regret—
'Tis madness to remember,
'Twere wisdom to forget.

For me no gracious harvest—
Would God we never had met!
For, cruel as remembrance is,
'Tis harder to forget.

EVERY man should admire pretty women. There would be something lacking in his masculine makeup if he did not. But it should go no farther than merely admiring them if the man is not on marriage intent.

Many a man makes love to women through love of conquest. A woman no sooner accepts such a man than he is casting about for a loophole to get out of the betrothal, and she finds she has a backsliding Romeo to deal with.

to keep her hold on a lover when once he begins to make excuses to remain away from her side. If she is swayed by her head, instead of her heart, she will know that he would make the poorest kind of a husband, and depending on him for support would be a serious matter.

A woman does not have to worry over "keeping up the attraction" says Laura Jean Libbey, if her Romeo really loves her, for he will be so devoted to her, so anxious to be with her, that she cannot keep him away, do what she will.

If unexpected business turns up, detaching him on the evening she expected him he will send her a telegram explaining his absence which worries him more than it does her.

The backsliding Romeo is the kind of man who has no compunction in sitting down for his wife to support him. She must keep the home and buy her own clothes, or go without both, for all he cares.

He is not a man to confide her troubles or worries to. Her sighs fall upon deaf ears. If she lies down and dies from overwork he fancies there are many more good, strong workers left who are looking for a nice, well preserved husband, for whom they would be pleased to put their shoulder to the plow in the struggle for support.

Lovers are divided into two classes only—the one who cares for a woman and the one who makes a pretense of caring for her.

She can tell the real lover by a thousand ways. He is ever thinking of her while absent from her; her happiness is dear to him; he will give life itself, almost, to keep her from hardships, worry, and toil.

I never have yet seen a man who really cared for a woman who would let her toil if he could avert it. This is an unflattering test of a man's affection.

Backsliding Romances are of a class of men who delight in making love until affairs begin to grow serious, perhaps until her parents begin to joke them upon the subject of marriage. Then his visits begin to grow less frequent. He is too diplomatic, generally, to cease calling abruptly, but soon the woman must realize beyond doubt that all is over between them.

There always will be a class of woman who will weep bitter tears over the backsliding of a lover. There and others so brave and self reliant they will force themselves to love and learn to forget.

These are of the kind too sensible to cry over spilled milk. They turn at once to a more faithful lover, whom they were too kind to give hope to before, and they are astonished to find how quickly they can recover from love's fever and the loss of a fickle sweetheart.

Miss Beadie Cooke, who has been teaching in Southern California for the past several months will return home on her vacation about the middle of next month.

LADIES ART CLUB

Last Friday afternoon Mrs. E. D. McArthur very delightfully entertained the Ladies Art Club; the parlor being beautifully decorated with an abundance of daffodils and fern; the color scheme of yellow was also carried out in the refreshments, each plate being graced with a daffodil favor. WATER WASTE

Little drops of water dripping from many faucets and leaky fixtures makes a flood of waste. New washers are easily placed in faucets and does not require a plumber if there is a valve to shut off all the water from the house as there should be in every case. A new washer costs about nothing but if a leak is allowed to continue long, the valve seat may be cut and an entire new faucet required.

A faucet leaking to the extent of only separate drops of water will waste 15 gallons per day and 5440 gallons per year. A hole 1-32 inch in diameter is so small that an ordinary pin will nearly fill it, yet in one day 528 gallons or in one year 191,760 gallons of water will be wasted, which is as much as 3 or 4 families will use in the same time. Multiply the waste from one faucet by several hundred and the figures are so enormous that it is easily understood why water systems all over the country are trying to educate the public in preventing waste.
