MOTHER'S REWARD

The pink of baby cheeks is all she ever asks for her reward. With simple, homely little wants the gentle heart of her is stored. Not glittering gold nor gaudy fame is patient mother striving for. But health and smiling eyes at home and romping children on the floor. Day in and out she hums a song of cheerfulness and works away. And for her ceaseless hours of toil she asks no greater sum of pay. Than laughter on her babies' lips, and lusty little appetites; The bang of spoons on dinner plates the inmost soul of her delights. The little bodies firm and straight are compensation quite enough for all the many tasks she knows; nor does she mind the pathways rough. O'er which at times her feet must tread, if only when the day is done. The pink of health is on the cheek of every sleeping little one. Yes, all a mother ever asks, for all her sacrifice and care. Is that her babies shall be well, and grow to men and women fair; And if when they are older grown and bring her love as her reward For all the pain of motherhood she nightly kneels and thanks the Lord. —Selected.
