WILL RUSH PILING

Big Pendulum Drives Being Constructed For Trestle Work on North and South Lakes

Two Big Pendulum pile drivers are now being constructed at the Hauser and Hauser camps. With these completed, and work on them is rapid, the driving of piling for the trestling on North and South Lakes will be commenced, according to Kenneth D. Hauser who was in the city last evening. The Breakwater on the North Bend bridge is being put in shape for the rails. There remains but one spot yet to fix, a break in the grade where the wind has raised a little havoc.

The steel work from Coos Bay north to Tunnel 7 will be in charge of V. G. Hindmarsh for the Southern Pacific though Hauser and Hauser have the contract for the putting in of all trestling.

The grade between North Inlet and Lakes is now being put in shape for the rails. There remains but one spot yet to fix, a break in the grade where the wind has raised a little havoc. In all there are 4,700 feet of trestle to be driven on North and South Lakes, according to Kenneth Hauser. It is expected that this will be finished this summer.

He said he would not be surprised to see the big bridge across the Bay at North Bend completed in January. This, coupled with the rushing of the track laying supports the belief that the road will be opened through to Eugene by January 1, 1916. This fact was reported at the time Engineer Fontaine made his trip over the line a few weeks ago. He said then there is a good possibility of trestling being done, providing no unforeseen delay is occasioned along the line. Passengers and freight would have to be ferried across the Umpqua river which will be the last link completed.

All piling for the trestling will be themselves, said Mr. Hauser last evening. This, he says, provides for all the work under one contract and proves most satisfactory. Some of the piling will be more than 125 feet in length, especially that for North Lake.

At the present time, it is stated, all rails on hand have been laid out from Coos Bay. The shipment coming on the Breakwater will allow the track crew to push on through with their work and it is probable there will be no more delays until the steel is through to the Umpqua.

WOMEN OF WOODCRAFT TAKE OFF OFFICIALS

The Circle of the Women of Woodcraft gathered in force last evening at their hall on Front street for an evening of jollity. A farce taking off the leading characteristics of the city is said to have been indulged in, though information is scant and secret, after which they all partook of a banquet. There were about 30 present from the North Bend lodge.

The women divided into two sides, each to stage certain stunts. One arranged the farce, the other arranged the banquet and invited in the guests from North Bend for the occasion.

OPEN NEW HALL

The fine new Loggie Hall in North Bend which was rebuilt by the owner, Peter Loggie, after being damaged by fire, was opened last night with an entertainment given by the K. of P. Lodge of North Bend. The Chancellor Commander, J. F. Grubbs, gave the address of welcome and there was a response by Peter Loggie. Among others who took part in the program were Rev. F. S. Shilman, Miss Imhoff, Lyle Chapelle, Mrs. Worrell, Miss Anna Truman, Miss Marjorie Swearingen, Earl Brown and others.

The new hall is one of the finest in Southern Oregon. It is used as a meeting place by several of the organizations as well as for other gatherings.

MARJORIE GRAHAM IN LEADING ROLE

Parts of Peggy and Jack in Senior Play Well Handled by Young People "Peggy is the one I've turned against," says Quockett, but few will share his sentiments. Whom you see Marjorie Graham as the essential to her own a duck-ness (namely, a duke), you will be far her, heart and soul. When she first enters, shaking an ink finger at Ermytrude she wins you, and throughout the play she holds you by her vivacious acting. Eric Storgard, playing opposite as Lieutenant Jack Mallory, is just the lover for Peggy. "Jack is such a devil," says Quockett, "such a nice devil." Storgard plays the part with dash and abandon and finally, when he and Peggy are looking at the plants in the conservatory, but there, you've guessed it already. Be sure to see it at the Orpheum Theater Friday night. Don't forget the time nor the place—nor the girl.
