Before leaving the state capital Mr. Goss visited the Game Commission and secured their promise to aid in establishing bass in the lake. Two years ago some bass were sent here. Mr. Goss was asked about these. He told the members that so few had been "planted" at that time and the food now is so plentiful that very few are ever caught and fishermen are not aware of how many there really are. The state commission will send 20 cans, each containing about 1,000 small bass. They will come on the boat from Portland and will be accompanied by an expert who will turn them loose in Beal Lake. With this large shipment started fishermen believe that in a few years the lake will be famous for its black bass fishing.
