IF THEY HAD LIVED IN 1915

Maudie Muller
By a Pessimist

Maud Muller, on a summer day,
Sat in the meadow sweet with hay.

No vulgar rake in her hand was seen
But only the latest magazine.

The judge came rambling down the road,
And stopped his car by the maid's abode.

He said his spark was on the blink,
And his radiator craved a drink.

Our Maudie gazed at the roadster fly,
And said, "I think I will grab this guy."

So she hit her dad for the latest gown
And called next week on some friends in town.

The judge's sisters were proud and cold,
But Maudie's technique was the latest mold.

Her voice was soft and her ways were meek,
And she landed the judge in just a week.

Now the judge sits in his chamber dark,
And thinks, "Gee, I was an easy mark."

For, of all sad words that tongue can know,
The saddest are these, "I'm married now."

—Anon

and told him, indignantly, that he ought to be ashamed of himself and advised him to return to his wife, but he refused.

"I can't live comfortably with a woman who gnaws her finger nails," he said.

"Small cause for a man leaving his wife, the average person will say. Of course.

"Still you can understand how some little disagreeable habit like that might get on one's nerves and cause real unhappiness.

At a party recently a young man became smitten with the appearance and bearing of a beautiful young woman. He was charmed by her, and even went so far as to seek her acquaintance, and the thought came seriously to him that she might be the woman he was seeking for a wife.

And then, he happened to sit opposite her at the table, and she ate noisily. From that moment he had no further interest in her.

"Think of sitting across the table from her three times a day, all the years of my life!" he said to a friend.

If you could go to the very bottom of all the many divorce cases that grind through the courts you might find that a very large proportion of them are the result of some untidy, slovenly habit on the part of husband or wife. Some little thing like a habit of letting the stockings wrinkle down in slouchy folds at the shoe tops, or a frowsy manner of wearing the hair, or picking one's teeth in public, or wearing finger nails in mourning, or picking at the nostrils, or letting the shoes run over at the heels.

There is an old saying that a woman may dress in silks and satins and if her shoes are soiled she is frowsy all over.

After all, it is the little things that make up the sum of life. A woman can overlook an outburst of temper in her husband once in a while. She can forgive occasional fits of the blues or a lack of interest in things that interest her. But little untidy habits on his part, things that he does or doesn't do, from mere carelessness—those are the things that often put a heavy strain on her affection. Sometimes it is the other way around, and the husband is tried as that Eastern man was, by his wife's habit of gnawing at her nails.

The fault in itself may seem trifling. But repeated day after day it may shatter the happiness of the home.
