HERE can be little doubt that the most magnificent celebration of the Fourth at Independence hall, Philadelphia, was in the Centennial

The day, marking the hundredth anniversary of the nation's birth, was as impressive as the whole resources of the nation and the community could make it. The world contributed its thousands of spectators from its most distant continents, assembled to visit the great Centennial exposition. Richard Henry Lee, grandson of one of the signers, read to an enthusiastic assemblage in Independence square the Declaration from the original manuscript-something which, with that sacred manuscript scaled in a safe in the state department library in Washington, can never occur again,

Senator Evarts delivered the oration, and the heroic ode by Bayard Tayfor in honor of the anniversary was read. In literal truth, on that Fourth of July the attention of the whole world was centered upon Independence hall. The night saw a gorgeous display of fireworks.

Since that time the growth of sentiment and understanding as to the price less treasure of the old statehouse in Philadelphia has been rapid. The celebrations of the Fourth in the city of the signing have included addresses by such distinguished men as presidents of the United States. The city itself, SALEM - The cherry fair, which removing its private goods and chattels and councilmen and policemen to the war in session for two days class city hall, has devoted the statehouse to its just honors and such formal observances as, instituted on a large scale in the early nineties, have been well

The first publication of the text of the Declaration was in Towne's Pennsylvania Evening Post of July 6, and, as has often been remarked, on the page facing the statement that all men are endowed "with liberty" is an advertisement of a negro boy for sale, four or five years old, who "has had smallpox and measles." It is also worth noting that in the engressed Declaration the spelling is "united States." not "Luited States."

* OLD GLORY.

THE star spangled banner! Was ever flag so beautiful? Did ever flag so fill the souls of men? The love of woman, the sense of duty, the thirst for glory, the heart throbbing that impels the humblest American to stand by his colors, fearless in the defense of his native soil and holding it sweet to die for it; the yearning which draws him to it when exiled from it, its free institutions and its blessed memories, all are embodied and symbolized by the broad stripes and bright stars of the nation's emblem, all live again in the lines and tones of Key's anthem. Two or three began the song; millions join the chorus. - Henry Watterson, 1898.

The Fathers of Our Country.

This day every man and woman in our country should stop long enough to call up from the past the thought and purpose of our fathers in putting together the structure of a new nation. We should close our eyes and dwell devoutly upon the pure patriotism which burned in their bosoms like a steady fire in the darkness.

We should put ourselves in their places, think their thoughts, indulge their hopes, experience their fears, suffer their hardships and endeavor to see with their anxious eyes the way up which liberty and law, justice and or der shall go side by side with equal vigor and even step, blessing with their freedom and fraternity and ennobling with their dignity and discipline the ambitions and labors of mankind .-Martin W. Littleton.

 FOURTH OF JULY ADVICE BY WASHINGTON.

[In his address to the governors of the states, June 8, 1782.]

There are four things which I numbly conceive are essential to the well being-I may even venture to say to the existence-of the United States as an independent powers

First, an indissoluble union of the states under one federal Secondly, a sacred regard to public justice.

Thirdly, the adoption of a proper peace establishment, and, Fourthly, the prevalence of that pacific and friendly disposition among the people of the United States which will induce them to forget their local prejudices and policies, to make those mutual concessions which are requisite to the general prosperity and in some instances to sacrifice their individual advantages to the interest of the com-

Wrote Only Old Glory's Song. Francis Scott Key, author of "The Star Spangled Banner," wrote only one famous poem, but its fame is such as to insure his lasting place in the remembrance of the patriotic American people. He was born in 1780 and died in 1843.
