This is an excellent for its successful execution will open up a new industry for the farmers and one which will be highly profitable. There is an almost unlimited market for leganberry juice and there is no part of the coast where the fruit bears more prolifically than in Coos County. The trouble has been that the local market is quickly flooded, but with a plant for handling the berries they can be raised on a commercial scale. The yields are so heavy that the profit per acre is large. There is much of the hill land which is suitable for loganberry culture and with the plant established furnishing a market the farmers of the locality will have another industry which will bring them in a large amount of ready money.
