CITY REPLIES IN PINE STREET IMPROVEMENT CASE

Will Be At Issue This Term of Court—Asks Adherence to Clement Plat—History is Listed

Answer to the temporary injunction secured by the property owners of Pine street who protest against the cutting down of the street and the loss of a 10 foot strip on each side, was filed today by the City of Marshfield. The document is a long one and was made up by John D. Goss, city attorney, at the law office of Bennett, Swanton and Bennett who are, associate counsel in the case. This brings the case at issue in this term of court where it will be heard by Judge Skipworth. Adherence to the Clement Plat is strongly asked for. Several pages are taken up setting forth the history of the street and supporting the contention that this survey should hold. How the street, as it stands, is a great inconvenience to the property owners on Front street, is told. The houses on Pine or First street, structure of wood, are rated, except the one of Mrs. Nancy Noble as being "of little value and have been constructed for more than 30 or 40 years and can easily be moved." Nothing has been overlooked in the line of argument and even the roses and shrubbery come in for their share of the contention. The complaint alleges that the "flowers and shrubbery are not of permanent nature and in many instances are not beautiful or beautifying and but few are worthy of the name of ornament and can be easily removed." Further, it is claimed that the buildings are within the fire limits and direct menaces to the "safety of the business section of this town and it would be a boon to the business section to have same removed to some out of the way place." The temporary injunction was granted the property owners and enjoined the city council from going ahead with the cutting down of the street until the matter has been threshed out in the courts.

HUSBAND AND WIFE BANDY COMPLAINTS IN DIVORCE PAPERS

Thomas W. Allen Arrested on Day of Separation Hearing—Says Wife Used Butcher Knife

Matrimonial troubles of Thomas W. Allen, of North Bend, have been many and frequent. This morning, the date set for his divorce hearing in Coquille, he was arrested by Officer Emery on the order of Justice Shuster, of North Bend, on the charge that he has not been paying $7.50 a month to his wife, as he had been commanded to by the court. Months ago Allen was arrested in North Bend on the complaint of his wife who now seeks a divorce. She claimed that he threatened her life and the lives of two little children. Allen was released after promising to make the monthly payments. On his arrest this morning C. I. Reigard, attorney for Allen, demanded and secured his release on the grounds that Emery had not a written warrant for the man's arrest. In her complaints, Mrs. Allen says that they were married in Georgia in 1905. There are a list of charges brought against her husband. She alleges cruel and inhuman treatment, gross personal indignities, that he kept a saloon contrary to her wishes, and that in 1910, with companions, he stole $130 cash from the home of J. A. Thrift at Long Creek, Georgia. Further it is alleged that several times he has threatened the lives of herself and the two children, Nora, aged five and Clyde, aged eight years. Also she claims that he has unjustly accused her of adultery. It is denied that Mrs. Allen is the woman who was found on a cigar sign in the bay one night not long since. In his answer the husband makes many denials to charges and avers that on one occasion his spouse, becoming angry at him, struck him with a butcher knife, cutting a deep wound in the head, and then she took this weapon from her, continued operations with a claw hammer, striking him a couple of heavy welts. And to all this Mrs. Allen says they are "fabrications of an over wrought imagination." The case is being heard in Judge Coke's office this afternoon.

Gastronomic art is much cheaper than you would think. Chief Carter has new entertainment at the Hotel Carter, and a great fun, too, and doesn't general fund a cent, not "bean." Well, this is the way it is played. The chief, or assistant if necessary, sides up Chandler, and purloins a little menu, you know, one that all about the airline and the of stuff. Then back to the Hotel Carter and post up so that anyone looking for four iron doors can play the go out and get some good, easy and then the fun starts. The menu is, plain to read, guest can order anything on No. 1—ham and eggs up to strolin, French fries, etc. and is no end to the ordering. Constable Cox tells a story on the Chief. Cox took to Coquille. "Say," the chief asked him, "don't you feed down at that mill?" they do—once a week, they must 'o got in on the end of the week. I am starting.
