

The House Owner Should Remember

THE purity of water is not determined by the color. Limpid water often contains the deadliest germs. Our supply comes from a pure source, and though stained by alder leaves during the Fall season of excessive rains, there has never been a case of disease traceable to the water.

We recommend that consumers drain their hot water tanks of sediment, which occurs in all water, frequently, and thereby eliminate the discoloration of hot water caused therefrom, and from rust from the heating coil.

This would also lengthen the life of the coil by preventing it from burning out as soon as it otherwise would.
