CAPTAIN WINKLE TELLS OF MEXICAN VOYAGE

Skipper Now on Westerner, On Last Trip of Carlos to South—No More Rebels for Him

Tales told by Captain Winkle of a recent trip made to Mexican ports of the steam schooner Carlos sound pretty much like the stories brought home by the old sailors who sailed the Spanish Main, though not with the cross bones in the main top. Capt. Winkle left here Wednesday aboard the Westerner. He has just recovered from an attack of the fever contracted while in the south where he said the thermometer once went up to 128 degrees, and stayed there as though right at home.

He sailed from San Francisco for western Mexican ports with a general cargo, and then his troubles sighted before the vessel put into her destination was the extended hand of the Mexican rebel, palm upward, and waiting to be greeted. In the trip more than one big and hearty silver dollar of Uncle Sam's trickled into the multitudinous hands that were outstretched. And without said trickle, Capt. Winkle said the Carlos might still be in the south.

Law and Order Unknown

Law and order, he found not to be on speaking terms with many of the west coast ports, or at least they were not in evidence.

The vessel discharged her cargo and took on some 9,000 sacks of native beans for San Francisco. Hungry women and children gathered in crowds about the freight cars as the beans were unloaded and every time a sack ripped, they dived in for what fell on the ground. Soldiers were unable to drive them away.

Exorbitant export duties were asked, and sometimes received, though here again the old fashioned custom of "palm oiling" came in quite handy.

Fortune in Bullion

At one small port of call, Capt. Winkle took some $90,000 in gold bullion aboard the ship in the night time, the freighters being unable to even bring it to the landing in the daylight. The gold was stowed in the captain's cabin for safe keeping. Only a day later a rebel band made a raid on the mine from which the bullion was taken. They were very disappointed Mexicans.

Tales of instant riches won on the stock exchange through the war securities have nothing on the marvellous fortunes founded on looting, that have grown up and continue to spring up, in Mexico.

An officer of one of the armies came aboard the ship bringing a motor car with him.

"You ought to be able to afford a better machine than that," ventured the skipper, for he had heard the fellow was getting rich quick.

"Yes, Senor," was the reply. "I am going ashore for a day or two. May be I'll find one that I like better."

Captain Winkle was secretly hoping that he would and that the old one would be left aboard, but just before sailing the officer sent for his car. He evidently had not succeeded in commanding another better to his liking.

From a little port named Pasco the skipper heard of part of a cargo of hides that could be brought up to San Francisco at good tonnage rates. When just on the point of leaving for there he received a tip from a was told a small army of rebels was even then lying in wait for his ship to come, expecting to seize it and levy some six dollars a ton war levy on the cargo. The Carlos craftily stayed away.

From some point south of Mazatlan the Carlos brought 700 refugee American and Mexican soldiers up to Mazatlan, aiding them to escape from the terrors of marauding bands and almost certain starvation.

And so when there came another chance to take the Carlos back to Mexico Captain Winkle was well pleased to trade jobs with some one else and bring the Westerner into Coos Bay.

RUMOR HAS IT THAT BOAT TO HAVE NEW OWNERS

Now Belongs to Olsen-Mahoney Line Vessel Is Staunch Craft and Well Known On Coos Bay

Sale of the steam schooner Carlos, of the Olsen-Mahoney line has practically been completed, it is reported here, though the name of the purchasing company is not known. Also word has reached Coos Bay that the steam schooner Westerner, of the same line, is for sale and probably one or two of the larger Olsen-Mahoney boats will be sold.

With the price of bottoms as they are, sale of ships is now a regular thing, for owners see a chance to dispose for almost enough money to later buy new ships. The tying up of thousands of belligerent ships is one of the causes of the shortage that has been months been sending ships and freight charges sky high.

The Carlos is well known on Coos Bay, having been in here a great number of times for the C. A. Smith company. She is a wooden ship, built at San Francisco in 1908 and has a length of 198 feet, about the same as the Breakwater and quarters for 34 passengers besides being of 865 gross tonnage.

Nothing definite has been given out regarding the sale of the Carlos though it was understood that one of the reasons why Capt. Winkle, who has been regularly on the Carlos, came in here on the Westerner, was that she is now on her last trip under the Olsen-Mahoney colors.

lan the Carlos brought 700 refugee American and Mexican soldiers up to Mazatlan, aiding them to escape from the terrors of marauding bands and almost certain starvation.

And so when there came another chance to take the Carlos back to Mexico Captain Winkle was well pleased to trade jobs with some one else and bring the Westerner into Coos Bay.

MARSHFIELD WINS OFFICERS ELECTED

VICTORS OVER NORTH BEND BASKET BALL FIVE

End of Second Half Finds Tie Score—In Additional Time Locals Toss Three Baskets

With the score standing 13 to 12 at the end of the second half and the allowance of five minutes extra play to decide the winner, the Marshfield high school emerged victorious, 19 to 17 over the North Bend alumni last evening on the local gymnasium floor.

The first game of the season, the boys showed the effects of but little practice. Both teams appeared with plenty of fight, but made repeated futile attempts at baskets. The passing and catching of the ball was also poorly executed on both sides.

However, both quintets showed they have possibilities and the coaches of neither one of the teams felt discouraged over the showing made. The practice of Marshfield has not been much over a week and that of the North Bend five about the same length of time.

For Marshfield all of the baskets were made by Seaman, center, and Burrows, forward, with the exception of a much needed basket in the last five minutes that was tossed in by Tom Watters who took the place of Kramer at forward with Burrows.

There was a good sized crowd present at the game. The probability is that the independent team will make its appearance very shortly now and stage a game or two with the North Bend alumni.

- The lineup follows:
- |                 |            |
|-----------------|------------|
| Marshfield      | North Bend |
| Burrows         | Bowen      |

NO ANNOUNCEMENT

Not Stated When Moore Mill Is Likely to Start

No definite announcement as to whether the Geo. W. Moore mill at Bandon will open again has been made according to the following from the Bandon Recorder:

George W. Moore, president of the Moore Lumber Company returned to Bandon to spend the Christmas holidays with his family and to look after business matters. He has been for some time past at Toledo, Oregon looking after his saw mill now in operation there, and returning by way of San Francisco. He is as to when operations would likely states that the lumber situation is encouraging, but made no statement be resumed at Bandon.
