

MRS LOCKHART DIES IN AND OUT AGAIN

until a good education was obtained. On March 16, 1848, while assistant principal of Norwalk Academy, she was united in marriage to Freeman Goodwin Lockhart, of Fairfield, Ohio. Mr. Lockhart died in 1883. Soon after the discovery of gold in California, Mr. Lockhart caught the western fever, and accordingly on March 18, 1851, they left their pleasant Ohio home and started on their long and perilous journey toward the new El Dorado. They reached Oregon Territory on September of the same year, after an eventful trip occupying five months, replete with incidents of narrow escapes from hostile Indians. Yet Mrs. Lockhart was often heard to say that she enjoyed the journey greatly. School teachers were very scarce at the time of her arrival here, and consequently her services were greatly in demand, so that soon after she began teaching in the families of Judge McBride and W. L. Adams, in Yamhill county.

After remaining there a year, she removed with her husband and infant daughter to Camas Swale, where Mr. Lockhart had purchased a large place. Within another year they disposed of their claim there, and in company with Judge Tolman and wife, and Dr. Oberbeck and family, came to Coos Bay, reaching Empire City on October 18, 1853. Mrs. Lockhart, Mrs. Tolman and Mrs. Oberbeck were the first white women to ever set foot in the Coos Bay country. The two latter ladies returned to their valley homes within a twelve-month and never revisited this country.

The day after reaching Empire City, Mrs. Lockhart and family moved to the place now known as North Bend. Mr. Lockhart was one of the original stockholders in the Coos Bay Commercial company, and he was assigned to North Bend because of a valuable coal mine supposed to exist there. However, they were able to remain less than two months at their new post, as the Indians, coveting their stores of goods and provisions, finally became too hostile to permit of their remaining longer.

In 1854 Mrs. Lockhart began teaching school in Empire City. She was the first teacher and this the first school in Coos County. Later, Mrs. Lockhart and her family moved to a donation claim near the present site of Myrtle Point, remaining there several years, when she again returned to Empire City, where she lived for more than thirty years. In 1886, she, in company with her daughter, moved to San Diego for the benefit of her health. She remained there for two years, and there she lost her beloved son, Andrew J. In 1888 she returned to Coos Bay, where she has lived continuously ever since.

Mrs. Lockhart was a woman of unusual mental vigor and strength. Gifted by nature with a remarkable memory, she was able, up almost to the time of her death, to recite long selections of prose and poetry learned in early childhood. Her remembrance of all events that occurred during her long and eventful life was little short of marvelous. Often she was called upon to decide questions of history that younger people had forgotten. Almost to the last she took a keen interest in all the affairs of life and the world, insisting that the daily papers be read to her each evening. As a pioneer she was compelled to endure many hardships and privations, but she bore them with the same unflinching fortitude that characterized every act of her life.

She was extremely proud of her ancestry, her father's family being among the very earliest Dutch settlers of New Jersey, and her mother's among the earliest English settler's of New York. Many and diverse were the calls made upon Mrs. Lockhart's time and skill in the early days. Physicians were few and far between, and as she had much knowledge of nursing and medicine, the ill and dying were her frequent care. Her kindly hands closed the unseeing eyes of many, and scores of children were ushered by her ministrations into the world. Though her own duties were manifold and her hands always more than full, she never failed to respond to the call of her neighbors for help.

For nearly fourteen years past she has been practically helpless from paralysis, requiring the constant services of a nurse. Doubtless this bodily affliction was caused in no small measure by her exceedingly active, strenuous life, which left her no time to think of her own nerves and health.

She was the mother of six children, four of whom survive her. They are: Mrs. Ella C. Merrill, of

BRESEE RISKS NECK IN METRO FEATURE

Famous Actor Takes Many Chances in His Newest Production

Edmund Brees, the eminent dramatic actor, is accustomed to "roughing it" in the strong, heroic parts he plays, but never before was he called upon to exemplify so many characters engaged in hazardous undertakings as in "The Song of the Wage Slave," the popular play and play's pictorialization of Robert W. Service's poem, now scheduled for release in the Metro program. His adventures carried him down into the mines, where he swung a pick and dodged dynamite blasts; next he had the part of a lumber-jack, where he superintended the dynamiting of a log jam; again he was a prospector flitting with death on the ragged edge of a dangerous cliff.

Mr. Brees is thoroughly at home in these heroic parts, his characterization of them being an artistic triumph. His sturdy nature and robust physique stand him in good stead, for few actors could possibly withstand the hardships or accomplish the feats he does, in the pictorialization of the Service poems.

Mr. Brees will be remembered for his remarkable work of a similar character in the screen adaptation of "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," also released by the Metro. In "The Song of the Wage Slave" he is supported by a strong cast and is given unusual opportunity for the display of his distinctive dramatic gifts.

Antiquity of Wrestling.

Probably the first authentic record of a wrestling match is in A. D. 1222, when chivalry on the European continent was undergoing a change for the better. During the reign of Henry III, of England a match took place in St. Giles' field, London, between citizens of Westminster and the city of London proper. Wrestling was, however, popular as a pastime in England at a much earlier period, and from that country many of the different styles originated.

THE SENSATIONAL FINISH OF A CLOSE RACE

Yacht Race at Panama-Pacific Exposition for Cup Given by King George of England—From the Mutual Weekly.

Here is depicted the close finish of a neck and neck struggle for the $7,500 cup donated by King George of England, sailed over a five-mile course on the Pacific. The race, one of the features of the Exposition at San Francisco, was declared one of the best ever sailed, weather conditions being ideal in every respect. A Mutual Weekly photographer, who was stationed at the finish line, secured this sensational picture of the boats as they dashed across the line, in one of the closest finishes ever recorded in sports of this kind. It is shown in Mutual Weekly No. 35.

LIME FOR SOILS

Crop Growth Indicative of Condition of the Soil—Lime is Important for Growing Leguminous Crops—Manure Spreader May Be Used for Applying Lime

Mr. O. C. Restel, Marble, Washington, writes as follows: "Please let me know if our mountains of Lime rock here in Stevens county could be utilized for commercial fertilizer by grinding it fine without first burning."

Unburned but finely ground limestone is best for correcting soil acidity. The use of lime on soils is beneficial in places where calcium is deficient. Some crops require more calcium than others. This is especially true of clovers, alfalfa, and other leguminous crops.

Whether the soil requires calcium depends upon its condition, and this can be determined by one of two methods—either by a close examination of the plant growth or by the use of litmus paper. If you find horse sorrel present in large quantities it indicates that your soil requires calcium; also, if clovers do not grow well that is an indication that calcium is lacking.

By the use of litmus papers, which may be purchased at almost any drug store, you will be able to determine whether your soil is acid. Take a small quantity of moist soil and press it around the paper for ten or fifteen minutes. If the blue paper is turned to a pinkish or reddish color, it will indicate that your soil is acid and an application of lime will be beneficial.

There are several (at least ten) forms of commercial lime on the market. The best form to use is finely ground limestone. First: because it is cheap and, second: the effect on the humus is not so serious as with other forms of lime—especially caustic or quick lime. The action of finely ground limestone in its attack on the vegetable matter is less noticeable than with other forms of lime. The amounts to apply depend on how badly your soil requires calcium, and also upon the available supply of limestone. We have known of instances where as high as eight tons have been applied to the acre with good results, and as low as a ton or a ton and a half has been used very satisfactorily. The usual amount varies from three to six tons to the acre. This material should be supplied to the surface after the seed bed is prepared, and harrowed in by the use of a pack-tow or disk harrow. It may be scattered by the use of a manure spreader; in fact, this is the usual machine for applying finely ground limestone.

Siberian Camels.

The native camels of Siberia are a source of constant wonder to travelers. On the Mongolian plateau, for instance, the thermometer often registers a temperature of 40 degrees below zero, but the camels do not mind it at all, walking about as lightly as if the weather were as balmy as spring. On the other hand, the temperature on the Gobi desert in summer is sometimes 140 degrees above zero, and the beasts mind that heat just as little as they do the extreme cold.
