THE END OF THE ROAD

O the weather was summer warm and the woods were summer green
When we took hands together and sauntered down the road,
The pleasant country road with the farmers' fields between
Old crooked fences tied with vines that also had scarcely stood.
The meadow pinks were in the grasses growing slush beside,
And crane's-bill at the roots of trees where little people hide;
And secrets in the tops of trees that only winds may know
As thro' the sunny chambers their wandering footsteps go.
And never sky so deeply blue so near a happy world,
A few white floating nebulae like sentry flags unfurled—
And we were conscious of it all tho' scarcely did we see,
Because the light in human eyes held sweeter mystery.
We sat upon a fallen tree that hedged a burnie's nook,
A Jenny Wren hopped down to drink, a noisy thrush made glad;
You read me woes of Eulalie out of a Friendship book,
And laughed because I nearly cried, the story was so sad,
The road turned west, and overgrown with weeds and creeper moss,
Looked less and less like thorough-fare that wheels mark every day,
And very soon we saw the end with heavy bars across—
A gray cloud dimmed the morning sun—and we had lost our way.

some of the charms which we can have and which are quite rare enough to be precious.
Not every girl can be beautiful. But every girl can have a good carriage. Every girl can stand erect. Every girl can sit gracefully with the end of her spine against the back of the chair and her feet on the floor. Every girl can walk without affectation, or undue hurry or without striding or swinging arms or loped body.

Not every girl can be beautiful but every girl can have repose of manner. She can rest the eyes of those who look at her by not fighting, not moving restlessly about, nor fussing perpetually with her hair or neck or belt, as many girls do.

Not every girl can be beautiful, but every girl can have a pleasing voice, well modulated and pitched low enough to avoid the ugly head tones that are so common.
Not every girl can be beautiful, but every girl can use correct grammar and fairly good English. She can, moreover, make her speech a rare quantity by eschewing slang. Beauty unadorned is still adorned the most, they say. In respect to slang, language unadorned is surely adorned the most.

Not every girl can be beautiful, but every girl can be neat and at least moderately well groomed.

Not every girl can be beautiful, but every girl, if she will give enough study and thought to it can have becoming clothes and a distinctive style. A woman who always looked perfectly charming was once congratulated by another woman on the pretty appearance she made, and answered: "I'm so glad you think so, for you know I'm not clever or witty or anything like that and I decided long ago that the best I could do was to try to look well all the time. I've put a good deal of time and thought into all my clothes, and I'm very glad that I've really succeeded in giving pleasure that way." There is such a thing as the fine art of being attractively dressed and it's not an art to be despised, either.

Every girl can't be beautiful but those that I have mentioned are just a few of the charms she can have.
I hope every girl will not turn up her pug or Grecian nose at those charms merely because they are within the reach of everybody. I assure her that she will not find that so many of her mates have taken advantage of their opportunities to make such charms in the least commonplace.

D. M. C. CLUB
