A girl in Kentucky has recovered $500 damages from a steamboat company for naming a boat after her without asking her permission, and they must rename the boat. She took offense at a marine item stating that "Kittie Marshal took the low chute and ran her nose into a plantation." —Detroit Free Press.

A Terrible Cause.

"What was the cause of the revolution ary war?" was one of the questions asked at the final examination for the term.

Every pupil, with one exception, answered what was expected. One girl wrote, "The cause of the revolutionary war was the breaking out of the constitution."

"August Flower"

"I am ready to testify under oath that if it had not been for August Flower I should have died before this. Eight years ago I was taken sick, and suffered as no one but a dyspeptic can. I employed three of our best doctors and received no benefit. They told me that I had heart, kidney, and liver trouble. Everything I ate distressed me so that I had to throw it up. August Flower cured me. There is no medicine equal to it." LORENZO F. SLEPPER, Appleton, Maine.

GOOD ENOUGH FOR A STORY.

▲ Tragedy in a Rural Hotel, but the Boarders Never Stopped Eating.

A party of engineers sat out in the light of the campfire on the leeward side of a hill in Dakota exchanging reminiscences.

"Let me tell you of an enjoyable supper I once had," spoke up the youngest member of the group, whose English had not yet been corrupted by the vernacular of the West.

"I was on my way to join an engineering party at Boise City. I had taken the stage and traveled west forty miles, when we drew up at one of those mushroom towns, where we waited an hour and a half for supper.

"Smoky Creek settlement, like many towns," he went on by way of explanation, "is famous for some single characteristic. This particular town is notorious for its lynching parties. It is about forty miles from a railroad, but occasionally an eastern bound traveler stops over for an hour or two on his way to a neighboring mining town. It is in close proximity to some of the largest ranches in the country, and is of course a great rendezvous for cow punchers, miners and the attendant retinue of fakirs, road agents, faro tricksters and representatives of nearly every calling who proceed to collect the living which the world owes them in the easiest way. There are several hotels. I stopped over at the Crossroads House. I went in and took a seat at the long table.

"Several glanced up, giving me a quick scrutinizing glance as if to size me up, then paid no more attention to me. While apparently engaged in consuming the bacon, corn bread, sorghum and dried apples, I had an opportunity to take in my surroundings. At one end of the table sat a gruff, sullen looking fellow who glared now and then at an inoffensive man seated across the table from him. From the fragments of conversation of those nearest me I learned that the two had had some disagreement over a game a few hours before, and there were possibly old scores to settle. Some one at my left remarked, 'That air night hawk for once got the best up the day wrangler.'

"The sullen looking fellow, evidently the day wrangler, looking across at the night hawk, said gruffly, 'Pass me the m'lasses.'

"The other looked up at him coolly, muttered something about a 'feller been a little more polite,' and shoved the pitcher across the table. The pitcher upset, and the brown liquid oozed over the table. The day wrangler evidently took this as an intentional insult. Without saying a word and with scarcely a moment's hesitation he took out his revolver and shot the man dead."

"It must ha' broken up that air supper," remarked one of the group, shifting his cud of tobacco to the starboard side of his mouth.

"Indeed it didn't," was the answer. "The other boarders looked up, but not a word was said, and the meal went on as if nothing had happened." —New York Herald.

"When the advantage of a seafaring life is better understood there will be no difficulty in procuring an ample supply of poor, healthy boys to train for it. The flogging and starving of other days have ceased afloat, and if men or boys will discharge their duty faithfully they will find life at sea pleasant and profitable."

"Most of the talk about the hardships of life at sea is nonsense. Many an able merchant sailor foregoes hardship and privation looking for work than a seaman endures in a whole life. The cowardly fear of being drowned ought never to be permitted to enter the mind. Besides, drowning is the easiest death a man can die."

"A boy who has no higher ambition than to be a laborer through life cannot do better than enter the navy and never leave it. In old age he will have a pension, and in the event of accident will be taken care of liberally."

"A law might be passed for the encouragement of the ambitious to present themselves for examination for officers at certain periods, but it is well known that the navy must train its own officers, for much of their education at present is scientific and unknown to merchant officers. The old yard that most of our officers were trained in the merchant service before they entered the navy will not apply in this age of dynamite, electricity and steam." —Boston Herald.

Good For His Business.

"Twenty dollars is rather high for a mile of a room like this," said the doctor.

"Yes, it seems so," said the landlady; "but then you must remember that the house is very unhealthy, and that there are most always two or three sick people in it." —Epoch.

Mr. Goschen, the English statesman, is a man of slender physique, stoop-shouldered and pale. He is painfully near-sighted, and can read a letter only when it is brought to the end of his large nose.

Zola, in the Figaro, in reply to some critics, insists that the emperor rouged his cheeks at Sedan. The emperor's friends, he says, have talked as if to have done so would have been humiliating—"the role of a buffoon." "On the contrary, this seems to me a great mistake. I find the act superb—worthy of a hero of a Shakespearean play, heightening the figure of Napoleon III to a tragic melancholy of an infinite grandeur." That is a characteristically French exaggeration. We presume M. Zola means that it was noble of the emperor to take the trouble to conceal from his troops his desperate physical weakness. But even granted that it was a prudent thing not to show a cheek of ghastly pallor, we fail to see that it was heroic.—London Spectator.

A Story of Hard Luck.

"The latest 'hard luck' story that I have heard," said a racing man in an up town cafe the other evening, "is that of a young man who went to the track and lost $180. He had ten dollars left. He liked a 20 to 1 chance in the last race. He went into a crowd at a bookmaker's stand and was holding his ten dollar note high in the air when the wind caught it and blew it away. His horse won in a canter." —New York Times.

Every Cow Her Own Milkmaid.

J. G. Thompson has received a patent for his automatic milker. An eccentric, three inches in diameter, is attached to the cow's jaw. From this leads a wire connecting with elastic nipples on the udder, each of which is fitted with a valve, making it an air pump when in motion. When the cow chews her cud the eccentric revolves and the wire is worked back and forth like a piston, creating suction in the nipples. The milk as it is drawn runs into a bucket suspended below. The invention will relieve the dairyman of much labor.—Homer Index.

BEWARE OF OINTMENTS FOR CATARRH THAT CONTAIN MERCURY.

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces, such articles should never be used except on written prescriptions from reputable physicians as the same will do no good to you if you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, a tincture directly upon the blood and mucous membranes. For external application, Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, O., by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.
