Those who are skeptical as to the worth of Oregon exhibits at the World's Fair will find in the following clippings abundant evidence that her big fruit and fine woods are attracting no small amount of favorable comment: Chicago Evening Journal: "A representative collection of fruits from the growers of Oregon is arranged on the case side of the north hall in a glittering array of glass jars. Oregon prides herself on her grapes. Her soil produces with utmost impartiality Italian, German, French, Hungarian and her own silver grapes. When it comes to a matter of size the State is also well to the fore. There is a pear in her exhibit which measures 9 inches and weighs 4 1/2 pounds; a 'Gloria Mundi' apple weighing 2 pounds, a cherry 3 1/2 inches in diameter, and peaches 1 1/2 inches in circumference." Chicago Tribune: "In the horticultural building, Oregon, which was the first State in the complete rotation of crops which opened May 1, makes an exhibit which should be seen by all. It is a wonderful story of the resources of that State. Its plan of display is remarkably artistic, and shows its many varieties of fruit in jar and on plate to great advantage. In all there are 480 sorts of apples, 100 sorts of peaches, 100 sorts of plums, 240 immense jars of fruit in solution. There are monster pears, quinces, plums, peaches, apricots, cherries and grapes, any one of which, except the two latter, would do for dessert for a medium-sized family. There are 90 cases of prunes, 100 cases of peaches, plums, pears and other fruits. Chicago Inter-Ocean: Sections of horticultural hall contain fruits and vines, or more properly speaking, the displays of the bureau of viticulture and pomology. Of the latter Oregon, California, Utah and Nevada have exceedingly fine exhibits ready for inspection.
