Character of Bryan.

The New York World, which is opposed to the democratic ticket and platform, sent James Creelman to Lincoln, Nebraska, to learn just what manner of man William Jennings Bryan is. The World publishes the result of Creelman's investigation under the head "A New View of Bryan." The famous correspondent says in part:

"While Mr. Bryan was studying law he served as a clerk in Lyman Trumbull's office at $5 a week. He was easily the leader of his class and had a weakness for buying books relating to various forms of modern government. He immersed himself in constitutional law and shrank from the technical side of his profession.

"He was a tremendous student, but liked pleasant abstractions and broad political propositions, and was averse to dry details. His philosophers were Jackson, Jefferson, Lincoln, Benton and Cooley. After graduating from Union law school in Chicago Mr. Bryan served six months more in Lyman Trumbull's office, and then went to Jacksonville, Ills., where he practiced law for about four years.

"It has been said that never in his life has he appeared in court as the representative of a corporation. When he left congress he was offered a salary of $10,000 a year for his services as general attorney for a railway and oil enterprise owned by the Standard Oil Company. His answer was that he would not take the position for all the profits of the company.

"When Mr. Bryan came to Lincoln, in 1887, and formed a law partnership with Mr. Talbot, he urged his old classmate to resign his position as counsel for the Missouri Pacific Railway Company. Mr. Bryan insisted that such a connection would prevent the firm from taking cases against allied corporations. The partnership agreement provided that the firm should have nothing to do with Missouri Pacific or any other corporation, and that that part of the business should be the personal affair of Mr. Talbot. In order to emphasize his opposition, Mr. Bryan twice appeared in court against the Missouri Pacific Company.

"When Mr. Bryan was in congress he was urged to vote against the anti-trust bill. Telegrams were sent from the east to Mr. Talbot asking him to urge his partner to vote against the bill. Mr. Talbot promptly telegraphed to Mr. Bryan on the subject, and the young congressman replied that the interests of the common people demanded a law protecting them from the encroachments and combinations of corporate power. He told his partner that it was necessary for the life and prosperity of the nation that the competitive

This is the complaint of thousands at this season. They have no appetite; food does not relish. They need the toning up of the stomach and digestive organs, which a course of Hood's Sarsaparilla will give them. It also purifies and enriches the blood, cures that distress after eating and internal misery only a dyspeptic can know, creates an appetite, overcomes that tired feeling and builds up and sustains the whole physical system. It so promptly and efficiently relieves dyspeptic symptoms and cures nervous headaches, that it seems to have almost "a magic touch."

principle should be kept alive, and that anything interfering with it should be restrained.

"He has constantly said that the failure to enforce the anti-trust laws was due to the apathy of the administration at Washington, and he looked upon the selection of Mr. Olney for the office of attorney-general as a part of the general scheme for controlling the government and rendering popular opposition to unjust corporate power futile. He has said many times that the attorney-general should zealously press the anti-monopoly statutes, so that if they should prove defective, congress could properly perfect them.

"He holds that a rich man's property is as sacred as a poor man's, but no more so, and that the government should be able to protect the weakest and poorest citizen against the oppression of the most powerful corporations.

A whale was driven ashore at Bandon last Sunday morning. Captain Hans Reed secured it, and prepared to utilize the catch. It came on the beach just above the lookout. It is over 30 feet long, and 10½ feet across the flukes. It is of the kind called Greenland, or the right whale, and these are very valuable for their oil and bone. It is about half grown, but will bring its captor not less than $200. The stranding was a great event for the many visitors on the beach.

Any man ought to be able to find some ticket to vote this fall. There are already five presidential tickets in the field—republican, democratic, prohibition straight, prohibition broad gauge and populist. A gold democratic ticket and a middle-of-the-road populist ticket are yet to follow.

A fusion between the democrats and populists of Kansas will be effected by the populists endorsing Bryan and Sewall electors and the democrats endorsing the populist state officers. Ex-Governor Lewelling says Bryan will carry Kansas by 50,000 majority.

We are in receipt of a copy of the ninth edition of Copp's Mining code, published by H. W. Copp, of Washington, D. C. This book is a valuable volume of over 200 pages, and is filled with information concerning mines, mining laws, and a variety of other subjects relating to mining in the United States. The price is 50 cents.

The Oregonian claims that W. J. Bryan is some way indirectly employed as a railroad attorney. This is certainly not true or the Oregonian would be his earnest supporter for the presidency.—Roseburg Review.
