More immigration is pouring into Oregon this spring than ever before. What are Toledo people doing towards securing their proportion.

That was a very gratifying little remark that President McKinley made concerning the position taken by Governor Geer. Oregon is all right in his hands, and the people appreciate the president's kindly feeling toward Oregon, her governor and her true-blue volunteers. It is not flattery, either, for the gratifying remarks in this instance are well merited.

Another strike, one of the orderly sort, is on at Wardner, Idaho, where a similar one took place in 1892. Already several lives are lost and a half million of property destroyed. The locality is now under martial law. 'Tis a state of things much to be deplored, no matter whether the mine owners or working men's union is at fault. No good usually results from a strike, because two wrongs do not make a right. The result will be a useless waste of working men's savings and the property of the mine owners. The lives lost are usually working men or state or county officers.

No complaint was made by those who oppose the court house at the meeting of the Court this week. Such threats were made but THE LEADER is pleased that no such move was made. It would only be a black eye for our county and our people.

The Samoan Muddle.

The trouble in Samonia has proved to be far more protracted and serious than any one in Europe or America had anticipated when the dissatisfaction over the decision of Chief Justice Chambers was first announced three months ago. When Chief Justice Chambers gave his decision in favor of young Malietoa Tannus and against Mataafa, the United States was not represented at Samoa by a warship. As our readers will remember the English were in accord with the Americans in supporting the claims of young Malietoa, while the Germans were backing Mataafa. Only ten years ago the situation had been reversed. Mataafa was waging his war for supremacy under the direction of an American, while the Germans were in sympathy with the other side. A number of German subjects were massacred and mutilated by Mataafa. Subsequently England, Germany, and the United States came together and adopted the general act of Berlin. Mataafa was banished, and it was distinctly understood that he was to be henceforth excluded from all consideration in the selection of Samoan rulers. The Germans, however, for reasons that have to do with their strong desire to obtain a dominating influence in Samoa, brought Mataafa back and made him a candidate for the kingship on the death last year, of the old Malietoa. Samoan kings, in accordance with their old-time customs, are elected by the people. There seems to be no doubt of the truth of the German contention that Mataafa received a large majority of the votes. The general act of Berlin, however, makes the decision of the chief justice on the question of the selection of the king final, beyond any further appeal. Chief Justice Chambers, after a long hearing of the case, found Mataafa ineligible under the act of Berlin, and gave his judgment therefore in favor of the younger candidate. The followers of Mataafa, still abetted by the German consul, Rose, the German president of the municipal council of Apia, and all the German element of the foreign population, refused to accept the judgment of the court, made war upon the ill-armed followers of the young Malietoa, and installed Mataafa as king. This, of course, was a revolutionary proceeding. On account of the strength of the followers of Mataafa there was nothing to do for a time but to accept the arrangement as a provisional one until there was a sufficient physical force to sustain the chief justice. The United States sent the warship Philadelphia, under command of Admiral Albert Kautz, who arrived on March 6, and at once laid a calm but exceedingly firm hand upon the situation. He issued a proclamation, restored the authority of the chief justice, enthroned Malietoa, and joined the English in vigorously defending the situation when then the followers of Mataafa took to the war-path. Marines and sailors were landed from the Philadelphia and the English ships, and the Englishmen and the Americans fought side by side against large bodies of natives. There was an ugly rumor that Mataafa was obtaining arms and ammunition from the German warship. It is best not to believe this until there is unmistakable proof. Unfortunately, on April 4th a party of British and Americans numbering 105 was ambushed on a German plantation (with the alleged aid of the German planter) by about 800 natives. In the fierce fight that followed several sailors and officers, some being American and some English, were killed. This event at first stirred up a dangerously angry feeling against Germany. But the conclusion was soon reached that it would be well to wait for all the facts.—Review of Reviews.
