Tin Plate and the Tariff.

The most conspicuous example of a trust—or, more strictly speaking, an industrial monopoly—that is cited as a creature of the tariff is the tinplate combination. Since 1890, as a direct result of a policy incorporated in the McKinley tariff of that year, there has been built in the United States scores, if not hundreds, of mills for the manufacture of tin plate, an article that had previously been imported from Europe. It is an excellent thing for this country, which is a much larger consumer of tin plate than any other country, to manufacture its own supply. To say that the tariff created the American tinplate trust is not quite a fair statement without explanation. What the tariff did was to make it worth while for American capital to invest in a new line of business, and for a certain amount of foreign capital to transfer itself to this country in order to continue in the tin-plate industry. There resulted a great number of mills, and they have now found it to their advantage to combine and control the American tin-plate business as a monopoly. According to the old theory of American protectionists, domestic competition in protected industries could always be relied upon to give the consumer every possible benefit. But competition is fast disappearing before the growth of a more powerful principle. It will be strongly urged that the import duty on foreign tin plates should be wholly repealed in order that the domestic monopoly may feel the pressure of outside competition. The fact that a trust has been formed does not in any manner prove that it was a mistake to foster the tin-plate industry. The trust would, however, seem to indicate the fact that the tin-plate industry has reached maturity at an unexpectedly early date, and that it has no further claim, as an "infant industry," upon legislative favors. It must not be supposed that the repeal of the tin-plate tariff would shatter the combination. It would, undoubtedly, for a while reduce its profits, but the trust would be all the more firmly knit together. For under such conditions there would be no possible chance to develop independent rival concerns. There would probably ensue for a while a vigorous warfare between the American tin-plate trust and the organization of British tin-plate manufacturers. But just as the competitive system had been abandoned because unprofitable in the domestic field, even so the competitive warfare on the larger international plane would in due time be abandoned in favor of agreements for the maintenance of prices and the division of territory.—Review of Reviews.

The Oregon Ant.

This article does not relate to the sister of your father or mother. It is about the ordinary, everyday ant which Biblical lore says is a busy creature, being ever at work. One of our readers, a man of well known veracity, says that they display a wonderful knowledge of medicine as well.

A few days since this gentleman and his wife were out in the woods peeling chittim. While thus engaged they discovered a large chittim tree and at once pounced upon it to strip from it its outer coat. But they soon pounced off again. Black ants made it too tropical and the ants withdrew in good order, to evolve new plans of procedure. In fact they were "objected" out of court, and so carefully studied the actions of their busy opponents, whose large, cone-shaped abode nestled among the roots near the aforesaid chittim tree.

What do you suppose these ants were doing? They were apparently chasing up and down that tree in great haste, with no object in view, but a more minute inspection brought to light the fact that each homeward bound member of this busy colony bore a neatly rolled chittim pill, to be stored away for the future cleansing of all over-worked lives in the colony, thus proving beyond doubt that they understand and highly value the medicinal quality of cascara sagrada.

Our informant is now closely watching these busy and sagacious insects in hopes of hearing one cough and by close observance finding their cure for consumption.

IS IT RIGHT

For an Editor to Recommend Patent Medicines?

From Sylvan Valley News, Brevard, N. C.

It may be a question whether the editor of a newspaper has the right to publicly recommend any of the various proprietary medicines which flood the market, yet as a preventive of suffering we feel it a duty to say a good word for Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. We have known and used this medicine in our family for twenty years and have always found it reliable. In many cases a dose of this remedy would save hours of suffering while a physician is awaited. We do not believe in depending implicitly on any medicine for a cure, but we do believe that if a bottle of Chamberlain's Diarrhoea Remedy were kept on hand and administered at the inception of an attack much suffering might be avoided and in very many cases the presence of a physician would not be required. At least this has been our experience during the past twenty years. For sale by O. O. Krogstad, druggist.
