An article appears in the Heppner Times, whose editor is in the pest house with the small-pox, with the following postscript: "The above brilliant epistle reached the printer thusly. The editor pens the original, hands it to another victim of the quarantine and she, standing in the yard, dictates it across two fences and several other obstructions to a neighbor, who copies it and hands it to the present editor-in-chief.

It happened at Manila, and is a true story. One of the Corvallis volunteers had a watch that needed repairing. He took it into a jewelry establishment where two black Filipinos were on duty. The Corvallis man, addressing one of them in pigeon English, began: "Me got watch; he no go; he no keepee time. Me want you fix 'im. He got main spring all bloke. You sabbee?" In excellent English and with polite quavity the Filipino replied: "Take your watch to the gentleman at the other counter, tell him your trouble in good English and he will repair your watch."—Corvallis Times.

Company C had a mascot. Clyde Billings, of San Francisco, a boy about 14 years old, was taken over to the Philippines by the Nebraska regiment, but after he was there a few months he deserted them and joined the Oregon regiment and after he was there a few weeks he stayed with C company. Wherever they went he could always be found at hand, whether on the firing line or not. He performed many errands for the boys when they were on duty, often bringing them water when they were on the firing line. He is a very jolly little fellow and is dressed in a suit of blue. His clothes are like an officers excepting the shoulder straps have the word "Mascot" on them in gilt letters. He attracts a great deal of attention at Eugene.—Junction Bulletin.

Last Monday morning during a heavy shower of rain, the unusual phenomenon of a waterspout was plainly visible at Ilwaco and Fort Canby. It originated just off the dock at the fort, was about 20 feet in diameter and reached from the water to the clouds. After attaining full proportions, it moved off in the direction of Fort Stevens, on the Oregon shore, traversing the full length of Sand island, throwing immense logs of driftwood and tons of sand high into the air. After leaving the island, the monster veered abruptly to the eastward, and, crossing Baker's bay with a steady and rapid motion, it finally disappeared in the air within a stone's throw of the village on Chinook beach. The sight was witnessed by hundreds of people at the fort, at Ilwaco and on the beach, and the marks of its journey across Sand island are plainly visible in a deep gully cut through the sand. In its track across the bay it passed close to many fishing boats, to the terror and consternation of their occupants, and all who were on the steamers and other craft in the vicinity. Old sailors pronounce it to have been a vertiable waterspout, but it is the first ever seen by any river man or land man living at the mouth of the river.
