WASHINGTON. Sept. 14.—[Special Correspondent.]—The contest between the government and the Stimson Administration has ended. The French Government has agreed to pay $8,000,000 and to give a commission of inquiry. The American Government has accepted the terms and will now proceed to negotiate the treaty.

The agreement was reached after a long and complicated series of negotiations. The French Government had offered to pay $8,000,000 in compensation for the destruction of the Saratoga and to give a commission of inquiry. The American Government had refused to accept either of these offers, and the dispute had continued for several months.

The new agreement provides for the following terms:

1. The French Government will pay $8,000,000 to the United States as compensation for the destruction of the Saratoga.

2. The French Government will furnish a commission of inquiry, composed of experts from both countries, to investigate the incident.

3. The commission will report its findings to the governments of both countries and to the United Nations.

4. The governments of both countries will then proceed to negotiate a treaty to settle the dispute.

The agreement was reached after many weeks of negotiation and consultation. The two governments have been working closely together to arrive at a peaceful and satisfactory solution of the dispute.

The agreement is expected to be signed within the next few days, and the treaty will be negotiated and signed shortly thereafter.

The United States and France have a long history of cooperation and friendship. This agreement is a further example of their efforts to promote peace and stability in the world.

The United States and France have been close allies in the struggle against totalitarianism and have worked together to uphold democracy and human rights.

The agreement is expected to be welcomed by the world community, as it represents a step towards resolving a long-standing dispute and promoting international understanding and cooperation.
