Spiritualistic seances in progress in Austin, Tex., for several weeks, resulting in several hundred converts to the faith, were abruptly terminated when one of the ghosts called forth from its eternal resting place stepped on some tacks placed in the "ghost" path by doubting Thomases. The tack theory test suggested itself to two and was executed with startling success. As the "ghost" crossed the double line of tacks with upward turned points a howl of pain rent the night air and the disembodied spirit grasped one bare foot in both hands, screaming most unghostly malediction on the doubting Thomases. The seance was broken up in a hurry.

John Luther Long's new novel, "Naughty Nan," is published entire in the January number of Lippincott's Magazine. After awhile it will be brought out in book form, costing four or five times the price of the Magazine form. In this tale Mr. Long proves that he is a master hand a love-making in other lands than Japan, and in picturing the tender passion of a wilful New York girl he excels himself. Nan's aunt calls upon a favorite nephew to save Nan from a flock of matrimonially inclined men, so that the girl may "remember Cawdor," a theological student to whom her aunt has allotted her. Cawdor writes "lady-like letters" from across the sea, which filled his sweetheart with a desire to give him a severe shock. The comedy that follows is deliciously witty yet is tender throughout, while the title of the closing chapter sums it all up in the words "And my arms opened—and closed upon—Nan."
