A Damp, Cold Experience.

Dr. J. D. Wetmore received a telephone summons Tuesday night to go to the home of Louie Fuller on the Siletz. It is reported that Mrs. Fuller went to the home of Butler Fairchild Tuesday afternoon to inquire about some stray geese that had been penned by the latter. Words led to a mix-up between Mrs. Fuller and Mrs. Fairchild, the latter being assisted by some other women. Mrs. Fuller was rapidly proving herself to be the better man when, it is alleged, the husband of Mrs. Fairchild stepped up and gently drew a knife across the right forearm of Mrs. Fuller, cutting it to the bone and ending the argument for the time being. The other parties assert, we understand, that Mrs. Fuller was bitten by a dog. However that may be, the wounded arm was the cause of Dr. Wetmore's trip through the darkness to the Fuller home. Escorted by Liveryman George Hall, he arrived at Louie ford about 11 o'clock. It was as dark as the proverbial stack of black pussies, and the doctor called for somebody on the other side to guide them across. Mrs. Fairchild responded and Mr. Hall drove into the river. The current is rather swift at that point and the horses got off the regular line of travel and turned down stream, getting into water which struck the gentlemen in the neighborhood of their wishbones. The doctor became unseated, but managed to find the shore and succeeded in getting onto terra firma after about 20 minutes in the chilly river. Mr. Hall stuck to the rig and effected a landing farther down. The doctor lost his hat and instruments and medicines valued at about $75. The liveryman's shortage was only one lap robe. The doctor secured the instruments and remedies needed from the Agency hospital and dressed Mrs. Fuller's wound, which he pronounces a very bad one. Later-Butler Fairchild was in Toledo

Fuller were also in a mix, and that Louie swatted him on the arm with a club; also that Mrs. Fuller tried to get action with an ax. Butler's bruises indicate that something of this kind must have happened. He says he did not know Mrs. Fuller was injured until the battle was over, and does not know how she got the wound.
