Considerable discussion is going on relative to the quality of the Salem water. Some contend that it is perfectly pure, while others assert that it is full of wingless microbes and other dangerous animals. There are certain citizens in every community who are always ready to slander the water. Now the water of Toledo, for instance, is good enough for anybody, yet we recently heard an old-time citizen declare that it is bad—very bad. He said he knew what he was talking about, for he tasted it once—several years ago. We remember, also, that while we were in Salem last winter State Printer Joe Whitney warned us to beware of the water, informing us on the quiet that he never drank it. While we thus briefly touch upon the important subject, we do not wish to be understood as taking sides in the heated and learned discussion.

William Jennings Bryan of Nebraska is again engaged in the pleasant and self-imposed duty of telling President Roosevelt and our national lawmakers how to run the governmental machinery. The Nebraska sage and his theories have been turned down by the people several times, but that separates no congealed aqua with Billy. Although fairly reeking in prosperity himself, he continues to cut loose pro bono publico. Billy is an amusing figure. When he retires the stage will lose the greatest comedian of his day.

The days are gliding swiftly by—and Portland on hotels is shy. Of course, the visitors to the Lewis and Clark Fair in 1905 can be accommodated in tents furnished with sheetiron stoves and canvas cots, or the gambling houses might be temporarily converted into sleeping apartments and the visitors could munch redhot weinerwurst or tamales on the street corners. They needn't be afraid to come. Climate is about all they'll need in the line of necessities—and we've got the climate.

If press reports are to be credited, old Senator Platt of New York, one of the smoothest politicians of the age, is a heart-stasher, a gay deceiver. No sooner is the announcement made of his approaching marriage to a popular society girl than another fair damsel bobs up and claims the rare piece of senatorial antiquity as her ownest own, and declares she'll have him—or his equivalent in cash—which is considerable.
