For District Attorney.

In an interview with the Plaindealer last Friday, George M. Brown was asked the question: "Are you a candidate for re-election?" "Yes," was the answer. The editor has only known Mr. Brown for the past eighteen months, but during that time he has watched his course very closely and believes him to be an official who cannot be swerved from doing his entire duty to the state of Oregon and the citizens of Roseburg which he represents. As a public official of criminals he is a fearless and able prosecutor and bends every energy to convict men charged with crime and it matters not, high or low, friend or foe, if a criminal offense has been committed, the offender can count on a most vigorous prosecution and a sentence to the penitentiary. No paper could say more than this for any prosecuting attorney, and we do hope that Mr. Brown will be nominated and elected to succeed himself by an overwhelming majority. — Roseburg Plaindealer

Second the motion.

Our eastern friends are kindly asked to bear in mind the fact that the greatest attractions at the Lewis and Clark Fair to be held at Portland in 1905 will be climate and scenery. While the exhibit will be great—so great that many visitors will not be able to see it all—the glorious climate and scenery will afford the real enjoyment. Steamboat rides up and down the beautiful Willamette and Columbia rivers, trips through the famous Willamette Valley, down to Yaquina Bay and the grand old Pacific ocean—these are side shows which will eclipse the Fair itself and cost the visitor so little extra that he will feel that he is being treated as an old friend. It is not extravagance or buncombe to assert that these features alone are destined to stamp the Lewis and Clark Fair as the most enjoyable, if not the greatest in area and size of exhibit, ever held in America. Of course you are coming, but we give you fair warning that the visit is apt to affect you like a dose of the fabled lotus.

President Roosevelt has disappointed and offended Mr. Bryan and other and various kinds of Democrats by showing his sympathy with the movement which recently knocked out the great railway merger scheme. They probably expected the President to shed a few tears and give vent to a wail of regret when the Supreme Court fired off its opinion, instead of robbing them of a little much-needed thunder.

The newspapers of Oregon should all favor the proposed primary nominating law, as it means revenue. Under its provisions it will be necessary for a candidate for an office to announce himself as such through the newspapers. Where the law is in operation it is customary for the publisher to require the publication fee in advance, as the defeated candidates might forget all about the little item.

It seems to be off in a hundred places with Willie Hearst. The southern Democrats now refer to him as "the yellow peril," the pat handle suggested by his career as a yellow journalist. We'll have to guess again. A Democrat who can not command the respect and support of the solid south will hardly land the party nomination for President.

Santos Dumont has captured the heart and hand of a girl worth a million dollars. If Santos has sense to balance his luck he'll quit the airship business and proceed to have a real good time on terra firma.

The South American republics have joined hands and resolved to resist annexation by the United States. William Jennings Bryan may be responsible for this joke.

Samuel Piles is an aspirant for senatorial honors up in the state of Washington. The gentleman may be all right, but he should take something for his name.

Every fight reported between the Russians and Japs is the signal for great rejoicing by both nations.

General Miles is a Prohibitionist. We believe this might properly be termed a paradox.

Upper Salmon River.

Walter Crowley's house was moved about eight feet from its foundation on the 19th by the wind storm. There was considerable damage done to fences.

Miss Belle Harris has gone to visit her sister, Mrs. S. Desarte, at Salem, and also to stay with Mrs. Claude Hirsch this summer.

The poison larkspur is coming on. Mr. Harris had two cows to get it, but discovered them in time to save them.

R. M. Harris has gone to meet his son Frank and wife, who have lately came from the east.

School closed last Friday and Edgar Crocker, the teacher, returned to his home at Waldport.

Angora Items.

Claire Trenholm made a flying trip to Corvallis last week. I guess the toothache inspired him to greater activity than usual. Miss Zelma Trenholm made a trip to Five Rivers to have a tooth extracted. Toothache seems to be all the rage, and if this weather continues we will have something worse than toothache.

A. J. Oglesby got together a small crew of men from Lincoln county, "assisted by Willis Vidito and Linn Hedrick of Alsen," and opened the road over Digger Mountain in Benton county. The proprietor of the Angora creamery wears a pleasant smile once more, as he is enabled to get his butter to market.

C. V. Oglesby made another trip to the Bend to look for his gloves, but I expect he came nearer getting the mitten. Strange about those gloves.

Still it rains. Forty days and nights are not in it. I wonder if the wind blew anywhere else a week ago Saturday except on Fall creek.

G. S. Mangle said he was not going to let the people on the creek starve any longer, so he killed the fatted cow.

D. N. Johnson made Carns brothers a brief visit last week.

T. J. Carns expects to move down on homestead in a short time.

Assessor Howell was assessing property on the creek last week.

Mrs. A. J. Oglesby is visiting her daughter, Mrs. E. T. Hamersly, at Five Rivers.

We do hope the supervisor of this district will succeed in getting lumber to fix the small bridges between here and Tidewater, as they are in very bad condition, not having been repaired since they were built, which was a good many years ago. There are twenty-six miles of road in this district, and only a few men to look after it.

A tourist from Missouri hit the wild and woolly West, with hayseed in his whiskers, no buttons on his vest. The patches on his pantaloons resembled Asia's map, and the roguish glimmer in his eye, bespoke the ready scrap. The kids all gazed "Missouri," with his floursack filled with clothes; they said he'd take a "tie pass" before the winter snows. But old "Missouri" got a job and settled in the West; he worked and saved and saved and worked without a moment's rest. His nickles grew to dollars and his dollars grew to fives, while the dandy dudes who laughed at him were idling out their lives. A homestead on the desert, where a wildcat wouldn't stay; he worked and planted in the sand, but always made it pay. Five years slipped by in measured tread; "Missouri" showed 'em how, and when he saunters down the street, nobody guys him now! The boys who wore the high collars and looted him so gay are hauling dung for old "Missouri" at 50 cents a day. And when they heard the startling news, their hearts within them sank—for old "Missouri's" gone to town and opened up a bank!—Ex.

For Sale—Two bulls, one a registered Shorthorn, the other a good grade Will take in exchange sheep, cattle or cash. Robert Tassell, Elk City, Or.

A woman had hired two men to help with her house cleaning, and asked them if they could clean the picture frames. "Yes," answered one of the men, "if you could let us get some whisky, why it's the finest thing to clean them with." "Oh," she answered, "if whisky will clean them, I will send down a bottle that I have upstairs and you may try it." The men washed the frames with soap and water, and of course drank the whisky. When their employer saw the frames bright and glistening, she remarked: "And so whisky cleaned those frames." "Yes," said one of them, "it was whisky that did it." "And just to think," she said, "I came near throwing that whisky away. I bathed poor Fido with it before he died, you know."
