SIBERIA IN WINTER.
ARCTIC COLD AND ICINESS REIGN
FOR FOUR MONTHS.

Vladivostok Then is Frozen Stiff, a World of Black and Deadly Frost. The Way Frozen Food is Displayed In the Bazaar—Coast Sledge Racing.
Imagine a black world frozen stiff, and that is Vladivostok in winter. Wherever water once flowed, in bay or harbor, a wide, gray white road now runs, and these are the only two colors in a wide, still world. There are no trees. The large forests of which the old travelers wrote have long since been cut down for fuel, and the immediate hills behind the town are all as bare as a man's hand. Once behind these hills the endless rolling plain begins, which is Siberia, says Herbage Edwards in London Black and White.
Directly summer is over all the wealth of flowers which for five short months have simply rioted in the land go black, die out. The earth freezes stiff. Winter has come, and black and stiff the world remains. In Vladivostok there is little snow. Sometimes a gray dust, more like powdered ice than snow, blows over the land, but for the most part it is a black, not a white, world of frost, and in its way it is more impressive. The earth freezes deep many feet down and is as hard as iron. The whole harbor turns a kind of dull gray. That, too, is frozen deep. To keep any sort of channel open the powerful ice breaker has to go through its work twice a day. Twelve hours of an ordinary winter's day is often sufficient to block the passage. And all this in a town in the same parallel as Marseilles.

To those who have never experienced it real arctic cold is almost inconceivable. They cannot grasp the difference between 10 and 50 degrees of frost. It remains to them merely one of numbers. Indeed when once the winter has gone it is sometimes difficult to remember really how cold it was, but during the four severe winter months themselves it is a very solid and serious fact. Every night you go to sleep remembering, if you are new to such things, that a failure of the furnace which heats the house means death. You might wake first to know you were frozen or you might not. In the poorer houses the inhabitants sleep on the stoves, and the weak ones often die. Drunkenness here is often attended with a swift retribution, which does not in the least prevent it, and every day in winter people are taken up frozen from the gutters, the spirit which is in them only hastening the freezing, so that the carts which are always sent round to pick up the sailors when the crews of the men-of-war are ashore have to do their work quickly. In the summer time, when there is not the same need for hurry, the men often lie about in gutters until the afternoon. The word "gutters" is used simply to designate a certain part of the roadway. Gutters as such do not exist. The drunkenness among all classes of Russians is simply appalling. Officers think nothing of taking a tumblerful of raw whisky as a modest "bitters" before dinner.

When the wind is not blowing the cold is endurable, though five fur lined overcoats are not at all an extraordinary amount of winter wrap. You wear, of course, fur boots, fur gloves, fur caps. Women have their skirts and bodices lined with fur. Wildcat, being both soft and very warm, is often used for this purpose. It is quite astonishing the partiality for such things as oily sardines that one develops.

In the winter time the bazaar is really a sight. Everything is frozen stiff. The huge, long sturgeons from the interior stand in rows on their very sharp-pointed noses. Baskets full of little fishes are piled together like chips of ice. Frozen birds hang down on long festoons, and the municipality is spared one trouble—it never has to make away with food "gone bad." The bazaar is almost entirely in the hands of the Chinese, the tall, dark, rough Chinese of the north, who live wrapped up in wadded cotton clothes until they look like bundles of bedding. Without the Chinese and the Japanese Vladivostok would find it hard to exist. They do all the work of the town. The Russians garrison and govern it. The Chinese, the Germans, the Japanese and the other nations trade in it.
The great sport of Vladivostok in the winter is sledge racing, and when once the harbor is frozen over a proper course is marked off, and every one who owns a horse takes part. A Russian horse is a superior brute. He stands as high and looks as strong as a cart horse, but he goes like the wind. He will walk or he will gallop, but he does not condescend to do anything between. His harness is weird and wonderful and very Russian, consisting primarily of a huge wooden half hoop over the head, the keystone of the whole structure, which is attached to the shafts by winding long, thin straps backward and forward. It takes hours to put this on, is always liable to come undone and if undone is very dangerous. An English lady once related to me with horror how she was taken for a drive in Vladivostok and the horse and carriage just went over everything—walls, banks or whatever came in the way. It is quite true, a Russian horse does, and if you have once driven behind one you are never nervous again. You are either killed or cured.

In Vladivostok you take your daily skate as your constitutional, and the most exciting thing to do is to sledges along the coast—dangerous because shore ice is never quite trustworthy—to Askoid, which is an island on the northeast coast of Siberia.
