There was quite a gathering at the home of R. R. Wood on the 30th of March, which was Mrs. Wood's 45th birthday anniversary. There were 22 persons present. It was a complete surprise to Mrs. Wood. But she seemed to enjoy it. Most of the visitors brought something good to eat and the table almost groaned with its load. Mr. Wood had been quite sick, but the company found him at work setting out fruit trees. He had been patronizing the Chitwood nursery and was feeling better; but when he got his knees under the table he forgot he was ever sick. The afternoon was spent pleasantly in target shooting, jumping and gripping contests, and music—both vocal and instrumental. Before the company separated R. R. Wilson took some photos of the party. After singing, "When the Mists have rolled away," all returned home, satisfied with a good time at the hospitable home of R. R. Wood.

He Lost His Dignity.

A pompous individual from the east, says a Texas newspaper, happened to be traveling in western Texas and stopping at a hotel, when trouble started among some cowboys, who prepared to conduct the argument with revolvers.

"Stranger," said a Texan to the pompous man, "it would be a good idea for you to lay down on the floor till this dispute is settled."

"It does not comport with the dignity of a Boston gentleman of my professions," said the pompous gentleman, "to wallow in the dirt on the floor."

"You may be right, stranger," answered the Texan as he prepared to recline, "but my opinion is that you had better lose yer dignity for the time bein' than to have the daylight let into your system by a 44." He lost his dignity.

An Editor's Opinion of the Royal Gorge.

Edyth Tozier Weathered, in describing a recent trip over the Deuver & Rio Grande Railroad, says in "The Exposition":

"At last the goal of the ambition of years has been reached—marvelous, wonderful, grand and inspiring Royal Gorge is on either hand. The only disappointing thing is you only have one pair of eyes, while the train darts in and out of the tremendous chasm. If any who have never seen it are wondering how it looks just go and see. Thousands have tried to describe it, yet every attempt falls short of giving the subject justice."

If you contemplate a trip East, write W. C. McBride, 124 Third street, Portland, Ore., for booklets picturing Colorado's famous scenery, and any other information you may desire.

The teacher was explaining the meaning of the word recuperate. "Now, Willie," she said, "if your father worked hard all day he would be tired and wornout, wouldn't he?" "Yes'm."

"Then when night comes and his work is over for the day, what does he do?" "That's just what ma wants to know."

"Brethren," said a man in meeting, "so many sinners are dying every day that I have come to the conclusion that hell is full." He sat down when an old deacon in the amen corner, who was a trifle deaf, raised the hymn, "There's a Place Reserved for You."
