George Gets Good Job.

George Newberry of Siletz is now in San Francisco, having been appointed stenographer in the office of the inspector in charge of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry in that city. Here is an interesting paragraph from his letter to THE LEADER:

"The moving picture views and newspaper articles convey but a slight conception of the real magnitude of this ruined city. The four square miles of fallen brick, toppling walls, twisted iron beams, with a few fire-gutted skyscrapers standing amidst the vast area of rulu must be seen to be adequately comprehended."

Sticktoativeness Wins.

There lives in a New Hampshire town a young man who is bound to make his mark in the local world if not in any other sphere. Such cases of persistence and courage are seldom recorded. The story of his courtship is repeated with great joy by the older men of the town.

"Set out to marry Emma Wilson, and done it," said one of these men to a sojourner in the town who had remarked on the attractive personality of the uncouth Martin Soule's bride. "I reckon he proposed to her upwards of twenty-five times, before he got her. Every picnic and social most he used to tote her off in a corner, and they'd come back with her cheeks pinker than usual and his jaw longer and more set than ever.

"Well, sir, she's a real musician, that girl is. She can tear the piano all to pieces playing, and works the organ, too, and sings like an angel. Martin don't know a pedal from a pitch-pipe, and he's got a voice like a nutmeg-grater. Seemed as if his lack o' music would be his undoing even if nothing else was, but it proved different.

"He bought him a cornet, and he took it out to Wilson's corner every night rain or shine, and practiced. He had no knowledge, but he had breath, and folks said the results could be heard over on the marsh road, two miles off. There wasn't a mite o' shame to that feller. When Emma reasoned with him, he said if she'd have him he'd quit the cornet, but otherwise he'd got to have some relief to his feelings, and that instrument let 'em out the most of anything he'd found.

"He was on his own land—a meadow piece he bought a-purpose folks said—and there wasn't any preventing of him. And I expect Emma saw qualities in him from that very performance that seemed kind of desirable. Her father's as weak as water, always was, and his women-folks could turn and twist him, poor tool!

"Anyway, she took him, after he'd played that cornet right through the September line-storm, and they appear to be real pleased with each other. He's set out to be representative next term. Nobody'd given a thought to him till he spoke of it; but I guess on the whole we shall let him go. We'd kind of like to see what he'll do with the state legislature when he gets his hand in."—Youth's Companion.

Henry Nice in Portland.

People over on the Alsea make a living easier than any other people in the world, according to Henry Nice, who is in the city from that region.

"We are not bothered by railroads, street cars, gas companies, water offices, or policemen," he said today, "and there is no sign yet that we ever will be. We have all the fish we want to catch, clams are to be had for the trouble of digging, meat can be procured by simply going after a deer in the woods. We can dress as we like, and need not follow the behests of fashion. The brush furnishes us with plenty of berries, and we have all the wood we can use just for the cutting. We are therefore much happier than you in Portland can be, and we are not worrying over inducing new people to come in and settle. There are not many of us, but what there are constitute the happiest community in the world.

"We would not know how to go about living in a city, and could never stand to pay for the water we drink or for the wood we burn. Vegetable bills would look unnatural to us, and as for butcher bills, we wouldn't know what to make of them.

"Here in Portland you must rustle and jostle with your neighbor or go under. Over our way there is room enough for all, without getting into other people's way, and I can't get back home any too soon to suit me."

Mr. Nice has been a resident of that part of the Oregon coast for a score of years, and has amassed a goodly number of acres of the fertile lands of the beautiful Alsea Valley. He does not desire to part with any of his property, however, until he hears the screech of the locomotive, when he will probably try to dispose of his holdings and will tie himself with his family to some point remote from the turmoil of civilization. He has recently sold his fishing plant and cannery, and is enjoying a rest.—Portland Telegram, September 18.

Horrors of Close Shaves.

A New York barber has on a corner table a fine pocket microscope and a framed announcement that says:

"Do you know what a close shave means? Bring a friend here, if you don't, have him shaved close, and then look at his face through the microscope. The entire skin will resemble a piece of raw beef.

"To shave the face perfectly smooth requires not only the removal of the hair, but also a portion of the cuticle; so that a close shave means the removal of a layer of skin all round. The blood vessels thus exposed are not visible to the eye, but under the microscope each little quivering mouth, holding a minute blood drop, protests against such treatment. Bring a friend and see!

"The nerve tips are also uncovered by close shaves, and the pores are left unprotected, which makes the skin tender and unhealthy. This sudden exposure of the inner layer of the skin renders a person liable to colds, hoarseness and sore throat."—New York Herald.

School Postponed Again.

The local school board has decided to postpone the opening of the schools until Monday, October 1, for the very good reason that a large number of pupils are busy in the hopfields of the Valley and cannot return before the latter part of next week.
