That Bum Tax Law.

According to many legal lights, the tax law of Oregon is all to the bad. If this is true, there no sense in keeping it in the statutes any longer. It has caused trouble enough. Here is the opportunity for some wise and honest legislator to do something for Oregon. He needn't be so very wise, either. He need only to get busy and work for the adoption of the tax law of some state that has stood the test—that of Iowa, for instance. It is no disgrace for a legislator to urge the adoption of a law of which he is not the proud daddy. Indeed, the valuable representative of the people is the man who is not too thoroughly gorged with his own ideas to appreciate the ideas of others.

What's his name?

A Mark for Boys.

In the Sunday Journal serial entitled "From Palestine to Portland," Professor Horner of Corvallis mentions a sturdy Scotch lad whom some of the older settlers well remember. The boy landed at Astoria; worked for wages in Benton county before Lincoln was cut off; he graduated from the Oregon Agricultural College, where he is now a professor, and this is the way the story is told:

On approaching the Rosetta branch of the Nile we are confronted by the city of Alexandria. To our right is Pompey's Pillar, more than a hundred feet high; to the left are the ruins of Pharos, the old lighthouse which was listed as a wonder of the world. Further down the coast, fourteen miles or more, is the Bay of Aboukir, where was fought the battle of the Nile. Here stood Admiral Nelson and here stood Casabianca. Victory was too tame a word, so Nelson called the battle a "conquest." But which won the greater victory and which will be sung longer by muse—England's greatest admiral or the boy who "stood on the burning deck when all but he had fled?"

While we were talking of the little Italian boy I thought of a sturdy Scotch lad who had been pushed out of his home and enticed aboard a ship as a sailor. He passed Aboukir bay for Port Said many years after the battle of the Nile. His ship plowed three oceans and finally he found himself on the coast of Oregon. Driven by despair to greater and higher activities, he went inland in quest of labor that he might obtain an education. He excelled on the farm as a laborer and in college as a student. Labor on a farm and midnight oil in the student's cloister yielded a bountiful harvest to an honest boy. After graduation he was employed as professor in his alma mater. Finally he became one of the most useful men in his state. This is the story of the boy inbred with as much spirit as ever was the hero of the Nile. He sought such opportunities to unfold his powers of usefulness as America only affords. Who is the greatest of these—the noted admiral, the little son of Casabianca or the Scotch lad who is a worthy example to other boys "striving up the heights?"

In memory of his conquest the statue of Nelson stands at the head of a tall column in Trafalgar Square overlooking the city of London; the heroic deed of the lad of 10 at Aboukir bay has been chronicled by historians and muse; and the Caledonian waif who rose from obscurity through the pulsating power of American life until his example has inspired other boys to nobler deeds throughout the Northwest has won recognition which time will eventually accord.
