Rural Routes Only.

The Postmaster-General's parcels post project which has made such a stir seems to have been pretty generally misunderstood. It is by no means so extensive as most people have supposed. He wishes to give the privilege of a parcels post to people living along rural delivery lines, and not to anybody else. This is shown by the report of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General. Articles to be sent by the parcels post could be mailed only at the distributing offices for rural routes or at postoffices along such routes. This would cut off the department stores and mail-order houses from the benefits of the innovation and it ought to quiet the opposition of the country merchants once and for all. The only dealers who could possibly benefit from it would be the country merchants themselves.

As matters now stand, the rural population has no delivery system at all. The express companies will not send parcels even one mile from their country offices. Country storekeepers never dream of maintaining a delivery system outside of the villages where they do business. The carriage of parcels by the old Star Route "stage drivers," which was formerly such a convenience to farmers, is now to all intents forbidden by law along rural routes. Thus things are made as inconvenient for country people as they possibly could be. If they want a parcel, no matter how big or little, they must leave everything and go after it. The absurd injustice of such a state of things is evident. It injures the country storekeeper as much as it does the farmers, since they lose a great deal of trade by it. When purchases can only be made at serious inconvenience people will get along with as few as they can. It is amazing that there should be any rural tradesmen who do not see this. If they knew their own clear interest they would be a unit for Mr. Myers' proposal. This proposal would permit rural carriers to deliver parcels by mail up to eleven pounds weight at 5 cents for the first pound and 2 for each additional pound or fraction.

The report shows that star route carriers used to deliver parcels of all sorts at something like this rate and made money by it. Why, then, should it not pay the government? Of course it would. The project is a matter of simple justice to the rural population and its execution has already been too long delayed.—Oregonian.

What Caused the Panic.

Optimism is sensible, and justifiable. It is with sincerity that we urge it. Yet to be optimistic it is not necessary to approve of all existing conditions, nor to shut our eyes to the necessity or advisability of changes. The panic is pretty well past, but we would be foolish to forget it or not learn lessons from it, and seek to remove causes of such disturbing and damaging episodes, and so prevent them. The cause of the panic was lack of ready money in ordinary channels; the cause of that was reckless, gambling speculation in securities; and the causes operated disastrously and easily because of a currency system constructed and maintained primarily and principally for the benefit of a comparatively few, and not in the interest of the masses. "Wall Street" has made the system to suit itself. The people have not objected because they understood little or nothing about it. Congress knew little if any more and left the matter to "Wall Street." And when a panic breaks out at a time when there was no apparent cause or reason for it, "Wall Street," as a last resort, shouts that Roosevelt did it. And why? Because he has declared that all men should be honest, and public servants must be, and his strictures on thieves and rascals and lawless financial gluttons have hit and hurt "Wall Street." Gamblers hate a man who exposes their system of robbery. The men who brought on the panic are no more nor less than gamblers, seeking to plunder the public.—Journal.
