Parents.

(Concluded from last week)

But during the time that will be required to bring about these results, there is something more to which we must call our attention. While we are adding new forces are we losing the old? Are we as teachers building characters safely guarded by knowlege and power that will shield them from all snares? How many have gone down, just from lack of power to resist temptation, and how many more only because they were not brave enough to be called cowards. We must educate in the school and out, that men may learn to accept as unworthy of notice the sneers and jeers especially those that arise from throats and minds inflamed with that poisonous liquid that destroys every sense and feeling of honor or purity.

This is what gives the custom of the so called social treating such a power to ensnare. And this is one reason why the abolishment of saloons, which must at least check this custom, will tend to stop the use and influence of alcohol.

Lack of courage and firmness is one of the great failings of humanity, and it is for this reason, that our influence depends so much.

Let us consider the influence of the young man who shuns the saloons, and who adroitly shields the weak and tempted by bringing good to bear, and the one who may for a time control his own appetite, but by a free and generous friendly manner draw around him those who are less fortunate in the power of self control, and who in the midst of the so called, merry crowd, forget the danger or fear the sneers, and only to soon have taken the downward step, which is not easily retraced. What is the difference in this influence? And we never know how far it will extend.

But it is the same with the young women one chooses her company with disregard to these habits, and is intemperate in placing valuation upon wealth or position. She serves wine in her own home where the first appetite may be cultivated or openly affirms that she likes the fumes of a good cigar.

The other whose friends must choose between these habits and her companship, by kindness shields others from temptation, and above all else tries to live a pure, honest, honorable life.

Now to which side does our influence go? To one or the other as true as truth itself, and farther than we may think, though we fill neither extreme. And these pupils under our care, from the tiniest tots upwards, will fit one of these classes. And we must make it within our power to help decide which it shall be.

The ballot will soon again be in the hands of the people, let us not let one opportunity to pass, that will help gain the victory.

To the ladies may I say, we need not the right to vote, as there is more than we can or probably will do without it.

Temperance has come to be a great political question, and one for which we should work hard, as true American citizens. But do not hold the idea that we need the right of franchise, as a working implement, and are powerless without it. If we all work with a will we must win, but if we should fail this time, let us not become disheartened or think of giving up.

All Northern Europe is working hard for this cause. In England and Wales recent action has been taken upon measures to prohibit the licensing of one third of their saloons, which means the abolishment of thirty thousand bars.

The southern states of our Union are making rapid progress in the cause of temperance. If we can develop the same spirit and ideas here we can do as much. We are not alone in this work and need not be the last to bring victory to our homes. MAMIE WAKEFIELD.

Object to Strong Medicines.

Many people object to taking the strong medicines usually prescribed by physicians for rheumatism. There is no need of internal treatment in any case of muscular or chronic rheumatism, and more than nine out of every ten cases of the disease are of one or the other of these varieties. When there is no fever and little (if any) swelling, you may know that it is only necessary to apply Chamberlain's Liniment freely to get quick relief. For sale by Otto O. Krogstad.
