Just as Waldport is incorporating and on the eve of greater development comes the rumor of the discontinuance of our mail service. It appears that Simon Lendon bid in the route a little too cheap and now is recommending the discontinuance of the route in order to obtain relief from a bad bargain. It would be strange indeed if the Department would allow all the residents of Waldport to suffer for one man's mistake. We are the third town in size and commercial importance in the County.

George L. Boone

Died— At his home in Medford, Oregon, Saturday, December 3, 1910, George L. Boone, aged 84 years, 2 months and 28 days.

The deceased was born in Montgomery county, Missouri, on June 6, 1826. His father was David Boone, a son of Daniel Boone the noted Kentucky trapper and pioneer. While yet young his father moved to Jefferson City, Missouri, and at the age of 19 the deceased went to the Rocky Mountains and entered the employ of one of the great western fur companies, trading in buffalo robes. In 1846, war between Mexico and the United States having been declared, young George Boone went to Fort Leavenworth and enlisted into the service of his country, entering Company F First Regiment of Mounted Cavalry. In this service he participated in the capture of New Mexico, Santa Fe, in a campaign against the Navajo Indians on the Gila river, crossing back over the mountains he participated in the battles of Brazito, Chihuahua, and fought their way through five of the states of Old Mexico. They joined General Taylor at Buena Vista, and after battles at that place and Matamoras they shipped from Brazas Island to New Orleans, where they were mustered out of the service. They then traveled up the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, getting back home in 1847.

In the spring of 1848 he started for Oregon, leaving Kansas City on the 1st of April. With team he drove to St. Joe, where the emigrants were assembling for the long trip across the plains. A company was formed and Mr. Boone was elected captain, and they started on their long and dangerous journey. On the North Platte river they met Joseph Meek, the famous Oregon pioneer. The missionaries at Whitman station had just been massacred by the Indians and Meek was on his long journey for help. Upon their arrival at Fort Hall they were warned that it was too dangerous for a small body to go forward, but Mr. Boone traveled his company by night and laid up during the day, and reached The Dalles in safety. On their arrival at The Dalles they were entirely out of provisions and had to live on camas roots until they got to Oregon City, at which place they arrived late in the Fall of 1848.

In the spring of 1849, in company with Colonel Trault, Mr. Boone left Oregon City for the mines of California, where he engaged in trading in goods between Sacramento and the mining camps. In 1820 Mr. Boone was one of the members of the company that made the first settlement on Humboldt Bay, California. In 1851 he brought a pack train through to Oregon, and packed goods to the mines at Yreka. In 1852 Mr. Boone had tired of the life of miner and freighter and came back to the Willamette Valley, settling on a farm near Corvallis, and in 1853 he was married to Miss Morning Young, who still survives him. He also lived for some years on a farm near Philomath, coming from there to Yaquina Bay in 1870. He resided here until about five years ago, when he sold his farm here and moved to Medford, where he resided till the time of his death.

During his long residence on the Bay Mr. Boone was noted for a progressive man of strict integrity in every respect, and a man of great hospitality. Among the older settlers he was greatly loved and admired. He was a man of large family, having fourteen children, eleven of whom yet survive, six sons and five daughters.

The remains was interred in the cemetery at Jacksonville, and thus was closed the chapters of a life longer than is usually allotted the average man. His life was largely spent in active endeavor, and while he had accumulated a reasonable amount of the world's goods, he was rich at the time of his death in the fact that he was loved and honored by all with whom he had come in contact with during his long life.
