R. E. Collins, (Signature of editor, publisher, business manager or owner.)
 Sworn to and subscribed before me this 1st day of October, 1915.
 (Seal) Edw. J. Clark, Notary public for Oregon. My commission expires May 29, 1916.

A resolution was adopted at the Pan-American road congress just held at Oakland, California, urging Congress to investigate the building of a hard-surface highway from the Mexican line to the British Columbia line along the ocean side. It is only a start, but with such men as Samuel Hill working for it there is bound to be results sooner or later. The Portland Chamber of Commerce started the movement several months ago and this may be a direct result of the Portland work, and if such is the case it shows progress, which is quite desirable. There cannot be any question about the great need of such a highway in case the United States were involved in a war. With our inadequate supply of ships it would be an impossible task to move troops along the coast, and even though we had all the vessels necessary for the work it might prove impossible to use them. From a military standpoint this road would seem an absolute necessity. From a civic standpoint it would mean the very rapid development of the coast country. The many miles of beaches would soon become popular as Summer and Winter resorts and many hundreds of automobiles would tour the country each season. The counties could well afford to build roads to connect with the Pacific Highway and that would form two distinct arteries of north and south travel. We believe every city and every chamber of commerce along the coast should pass strong resolutions endorsing the plan and also taking the matter up with the delegations to the national congress and urge prompt action. The cost would not be greater than for several battleships, and there is a certainty that in case of war the investment as a whole would not suffer from the attacks of the enemy as would be the case of a ship. The start has been made. Let us all insist on a rapid and substantial finish.—Daily Tide.

OREGON BOYS' HOME

Among the recent incorporations granted by the State, the name of the Junior Agricultural College and Trade School is noted. That body was organized to provide a real home for the Orphans and Homeless boys from all parts of Oregon, and to so train them that they will become useful citizens.

The school is endorsed by the most responsible men and women in Portland, all agreeing that such an institution is urgently needed.

One feature of the plan is unique: They are not asking for one dollar of charity money, and the directors and the management are giving their services absolutely free. They are raising the necessary money just as a railroad does when it sets out to build a new line—they are issuing bonds for the money, these bonds fully secured by real estate, ten dollar bonds running ten years and bearing cumulative interest at the rate of five per cent a year.

They have arranged to buy 1000 acres of logged off land overlooking the Columbia river, and will clear the whole tract this coming year, using unemployed men for the work. Their plan thus not only provides a home for the homeless boys, but it gives work to the workless men, in addition to bringing under cultivation a large area of dormant land.

Judge Cleeton of the Juvenile Court of Portland is active in the matter, and county judges all over Oregon are being requested to assist in the sale of the bonds. Investors are taking them up readily as they combine real charity with sound business.

The treasurer of the Home is C. B. Woodworth of the Ladd & Tilton Bank of Portland, and he will be pleased to receive money for bonds and issue them to investors.

Another "trusty" of the penitentiary attempting to escape killed the warden and seriously wounded another officer and that he did not kill more good men was due to the fact that he ran out of ammunition. The "trusty" himself was shot and will die, which is the only pleasing feature in the whole episode. What's the use? What are our prisons for? One life of such men as Warden Minto is worth a million of such lives as the mis-called "trusty," who should have been, with a lot of other "trusties"—in his cell.

—Vivid Remembrances—
 (Chicago Herald)

A farm girl was milking a cow when a mad bull tore across the meadow toward her. The girl did not stir, but continued milking. Observers who had run into safety saw to their astonishment that the bull stopped dead still within a few yards of the girl, turned around, and went away sadly.

"Weren't you afraid? Why did he run away?" asked every one.
 "He was scared," said the girl. "This cow is his mother in law."
