

A LETTER FROM BILLY BOY WRIGHT

Dear Mistur Editor:—Paw and Maw have been writing a lot of letters to the papers of the county and takin a bite at each other until they have got me ashamed of both of them. Why can't they keep their troubles to themselves like other peepul? It seems to me that we have had enuff fun made of us without havin to have everything come out in the papers. But they wont quit and so I guess that I will have to tell the reel reason of their troubles.

"That's the sistum; give it to him missus wright; and give these other ornery gents a lick on the side to." But gee, maw didn't have a chance at any of the others, they scattered so quick. Well, maw chased paw around the store about fore time givin him about two whacks at every corner, till finally paw hollered nuff. Then maw told him to march strate home and try her sistum there awhile, and paw went. Gee, it must have looked funny to have seen our family goin home that day. Paw was in the lead about six feet and hidin strate ahead. Maw come next with that old broom handle stickin up like a baynet, and me and sis a trailin along behind. We was snuffin a little but we was to scared to bawl rite out. But, gee, when we got home the fun begin. Paw asked if dinner was redy and maw sed it wood be after the washin was out. Then she grabbed her old broom stick and made paw carry wood and wotter and do every lick of washin there was to do. But it did look funny to see paw wash. He had let his whiskers get long and they got full of sope suds and paw got too swettin and swearin and I tell you things was sure hummin round our old shack. But paw finelly got the washin done. It tuk him about three times as long as it always took maw, and then maw made him hang it out rite whear the naybors could see him. Paw bucked at furst but a couple of swipes from maw's old broom stick brot him to time, and paw hung em out. Then maw ripped him up some dinner. It was more like supper though, and you just ought to see paw gobble that grub. Maw made fun of him and told him that the new sistum give him a good appetite anyway.
