

Old Doc Trudgeon

Once in a blue moon there appears some writer in whom are combined the ability to tell real stories, the quaint humor of the small town and the philosophy of the man who actually knows folks.

The COUNTRY GENTLEMAN

has discovered such a one in Tom P. Morgan, and his stories, appearing every now and then in the pages of the great national farm weekly, are such a feature as I'd like everybody hereabouts to enjoy with me.

In the first issue you will receive if you subscribe today is the story of Old Doc Trudgeon, a brave old cavalry surgeon who at eighty-nine is as great a war hero as any of the boys. To come later are the stories of The Ghost of Lester Dart, The Autobiography of a Hill Billy, Coonrod's Buddy, The Feudists, The Pop Corn Man, and many others—you'll love them all.

I want you to know Tom Morgan's stories, they're full of fun, full of kindly philosophy. They take only one page in any issue—one page of humor in the midst of fifty or more pages devoted to the serious business of growing crops and live-stock to feed the world. You owe yourself that much fun, don't you? Then send me your name and dollar and read Old Doc Trudgeon next week.
