A Man Isn't an Alligator

The COUNTRY GENTLEMAN

A Job is an Opportunity, Not a Task. We must work, not primarily to earn a living, but to keep our self-respect. It's wholesome, hard work that has made the capable, understanding, self-reliant American farmer.

"If everybody would work at the highest efficiency," says some of the more vibrant-minded in the labor groups who still reform money and the work, "three hours a day would be enough to provide the necessities of life." Maybe so, maybe so! It might—in fact, they say, it does—satisfy the Fiji Islander, but it wouldn't provide the sort of home the Country Gentleman reader is working for. THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN is edited for the farmer who works. Its 52 big, colorful issues cover every farm problem and every home interest, presenting practical, perfect guidance that makes every word valuable. DO YOU 'MEMBER

The day Fat and you found the big tramp dog (the one that you made the harness for)? 'Member how he followed you home from the woods where you'd been fishin'? You tried to chase him away two or three times and he'd only run back a little way and stand and look at you. And finally you let him come up to you and he was all mud and smelled like he'd been havin' a tussel with a skunk. And Fat said: "Come on, what you say we keep him." 'Member how he jumped all over you after you decided to take him home? Seemed as though he understood all about it. And just about the time you got near the house Fat says, "Do you 'spose yer mother'll let you keep him?" And just about then you heard Ma's familiar voice: "No, I should say not; don't you dare bring that filthy creature another inch nearer this house!" BLUNK—and all the joy of life flew, and even the dog's ears dropped, and you looked at Fat and Fat looked at you. And then began the plea for the dog. 'Member how you promised Ma that you'd never let him in the house and you'd earn all the money to feed him and about fifty other promises, and after a while she says, "Well, go on, but take him somewhere and give him a bath; that awful smell will be all over your clothes." Oh! boy—'member how you felt then? And the dog began waggin' his tail and you went back of the house and gave him a scrubbin'.
