How to Be Healthy

The Crusade of the Double-Barred Cross
Practical Talks on Disease Prevention

OREGON TUBERCULOSIS ASSOCIATION

(Practically every adult person is infected with tuberculosis. This infection need not be a source of danger. To keep the latent infection from becoming disease, bodily resistance must be kept at its best. This series of articles shows you how to keep healthy.)

No. 2. WHAT IS TUBERCULOSIS?

DR. LAWRASON BROWN, Saranac Lake, N. Y.

TUBERCULOSIS is a disease caused by a germ, discovered by Robert Koch in 1882, which early in its course produces little nodules, called tubercles. It is widely distributed throughout the world, and attacks man more severely when he abandons a nomadic or outdoor life and lives in large centers of civilization.

There are two varieties of the tubercle germ that attack men, the human germ and the cattle germ. The cattle germ, while rarely affecting adults, causes annually the death of about 10,000 children and infants in the United States. It is conveyed by milk, and is killed by boiling or pasteurizing the milk.

The chief source of the human tubercle germ is the sputum coughed up by the consumptive and deposited only too often on sidewalks and floors. The germ gains entrance into the body by inhalation of the fine droplets of sputum coughed up by the consumptive, by the inhalation of dried sputum in the form of dust and by the transference through dirty fingers of the particles of sputum in the dirt of the streets and houses, from balls, tops and other playthings, to the mouth.

The younger the child, the more readily he is infected and the more often he mouths the objects he soils in the dirt in play. By the age of puberty two-thirds to three-quarters of all children have had the germ in their bodies, but only a small percentage of these develop the disease. It is estimated that 2,000,000 persons in the United States have tuberculosis today, and without doubt many contracted it first in childhood. It is not safe, however, to conclude as some would have us do, that adults cannot catch consumption, for a rather large percentage may owe the disease in their lungs to an infection in later life.

These facts serve to emphasize the importance of good hygienic living, and the avoidance of overstrain of any sort, whether work, pleasure or play. When man lives in the open he seldom develops pulmonary tuberculosis, but when he changes this for indoor life he may succumb. The boy and girl who play and live much out of doors have little tuberculosis until they become thirteen or fourteen years old. It then increases as the anxieties of school, the burden of work, and the overindulgence in pleasure make more demands on the body, until it is most frequent between the twentieth and thirtieth year. It is then that people are most confined, and most often overwork or overplay.

A return to the outdoor life, to the simple pleasures, the avoidance of self-indulgence in any way, may quickly restore a threatened individual to health. If he once develops the disease it can be cured, but it requires time, patience and self-denial. Rest of body and mind, education in regard to what is safe and what is dangerous, good food and fresh air are the medicines that restore health. Intelligent medical supervision, freedom from care and worry, confidence in recovery, conscientiousness in carrying out every detail given by the physician, work miracles, as thousands can testify who have fallen ill of tuberculosis, but who have fought the good fight and won out.
