

THE ASHLAND TIDINGS

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1877.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

A few choice Bibles at Chitwood & Atkinson's.

J. B. Rigdon & Co's new Centennial soap is a regular illa hee banisher.

Thanks for a call, just as we go to press, from Wm. Roberts and Henry Shalloch of Lake Co.

If you want an ignoramus to respect you, dress to death, and wear watch seals about the size of a brick bat.

Lost on Monday last, by Zetta Sutton, at or near the Academy, a gold ear-ring. If found, please leave at the Tidings office.

The legal voters of the Ashland School district are to meet on December 1st, to take action in regard to the erection of a new school house.

The thanks of the pedestrianizing public are due to Mr. Houck and Dr. Inlow for that stone walk. Won't the city fathers continue the good work.

Friend Pleinboles, we fear you are a little careless sometimes. That little tribute to Gardener, excepting the few lines in quotation marks, was Tidings editorial.

The letter of Mr. Sutton will be read with much interest by his many friends. It would seem that the southward trip, though a pretty rough one is agreeing with him nicely.

Thanks to Abraham Bish Esq. for the first sausage of the season. It was no rigid and antique bologna either, but a fresh condensation of Rogue River hog, gotten up and envired in the most artistic manner.

Many thanks to our old friend Welborn Beeson for a box of choice apples. We have long known that Welborn was a generous hearted soul but he still persists in multiplying the evidences of his liberality.

Dr. C. C. Daily, the blind phrenologist and lecturer, reports himself ready to inspect craniums, at the Ashland House. He will deliver a free lecture at Ashland on Monday evening, and will tell the people what a blind man saw in Jerusalem.

Messrs. I. O. and E. A. Miller have returned from a trip to Linn Co. They report business lively in that part of the State as a consequence of the farmers realizing a paying price for their grain, but his mud everywhere and lots of water outside of the banks of the classic Long Thomas.

ASHLAND IRON WORKS.—Our readers will see by referring to our advertising columns, that George Patterson has withdrawn leaving W. J. Zimmerman sole proprietor of the Ashland Iron Works. Mr Zimmerman is thoroughly acquainted with the business, and has an abundance of good material and will do justice to customers.

HUNT EXTRAORDINARY.—Welborn Beeson informs us that a few days ago, as two Californians who were evidently well posted in the Voguero business, were riding down the valley, they found two deer in the lane a short distance beyond Wagner Creek. Not being armed they pursued the game on horseback and succeeded in capturing one with a lasso.

EMELINE QUICKSILVER MINES.—On the 17th inst. we were favored by a call from Thos. B. Kent Esq., of Jacksonville. He is one of the proprietors of the Emeline Quicksilver Mining Co., and he gave us some very interesting details respecting the operations of the company. The mine is situated on the south slope of the Siskiyou, about four miles south of the State line, and consequently is in Siskiyou county, Cal. It is on a branch of Beaver creek, a affluent of the Klamath, and is about 35 miles from Jacksonville and perhaps 25 from Yreka. About 16 miles from Jacksonville the wagon road terminates and only a horse trail extends from that point to the mines. The route is not a rough one however, and a good wagon road could be made the entire distance, at a moderate expense. The regular daily yield of this mine, with the retort now in use, is about 200 pounds. The ore is immensely rich, having yielded since operations began, although the process of retorting has been quite imperfect, 57 per cent. of pure quicksilver. This is better, we are informed, than the average yield of the New Almaden mine, in California. A single piece of ore weighing 11 lbs., yielded 9 1/2 pounds of pure quicksilver and the probabilities are that there are vast quantities of ore in the lead quite as rich. The mine seems of immense extent and there is no estimating its value. The gentlemen who have charge of it are enterprising and practical and we would not be surprised to hear of their making their "everlasting fortunes" out of this mercurial bonanza.

THE OLD POEM.

Now comes Naomi Miles, who, having pursued the history of the old poem of Man & M. therein for back in the records of the long past, is able to furnish us the following version:

Like as the dunnock rose y' see, Or like the lark on the tree, Or like the daisy flower of May, Or like the morning of the day, Or like the sun, or like the shade, Or like the wind that whistles, Or like the man whose throat is open, Drawn and on; and so 't is done!

A Grizzly Bear Story.

It was away back in the dawn of the early days—in 1854. Col. T. Vault then lived a short distance this side of Dardanelles and a few miners had erected their little log huts in the gulches in the vicinity along the foot hills toward the Willow Springs. A few farmers had begun in a moderate way, to stir up the bottom lands, and among others thus engaged was one Dr. Kane. The day before the circumstance of which we write, a son of Dr. Kane having been out in the mazineta hills not far east of the T. Vault place, had discovered the retreat of a huge grizzly bear: for in those days,

The grizzly king of the forest, Possessed courage and brawn, Oft waded abroad in the valley, In the shadowy gray of the dawn, and usually spent the day among the mazineta and shaporal of the foothills. Well, a party of five men, avowedly as brave as any in the settlement, armed themselves for the conflict, and, guided by young Kane, started out in search of the "bar," expecting to have some rare sport. Among others engaged in this hazardous raid was one H. C. Hill, a young man of courage and muscularity, who was armed with a squirrel gun and otherwise equipped for a fierce encounter, with his urrine highness. As the party advanced through the thickets "every man in the rear" as Mark Twain would say, it happened that they scattered over quite a district of country and it was evident that as they would not all be together when the bear was found, there would be a chance for some to escape. Dr. Kane and Mr. Hill, while creeping along through the mazineta drifted into each other's company and, soon after, came up suddenly within thirty feet of the bear, whereupon the monster rose up on his hind feet and snorted so loudly that even the mazineta leaves trembled and the two valiant hunters felt the electric influence of sudden excitement—it was not fear—actually lifting their hats into the air. Dr. Kane leveled his shot gun and fired, in spite of the warning of his cooler comrade, and as quick as a flash, the bear was after him and the doctor fleeing for life. In pursuing the doctor, the bear passed within a few feet of Mr. Hill, who, hoping to save his friend by a well directed shot, let fly with his squirrel gun. As he had wished, his friend was saved but his own safety was not so well assured, for it was now his time to run, with the bear close at his heels. He was strong and fleet of foot but he was no match for the bear, and, while endeavoring to turn around a sapling quicker than the bear could, he tripped and fell and the bear was upon him in a moment. With one huge claw it tore off his hat rim, so close the blow came to his head, and then seized him by the side just above the hip bone, with its teeth, raised him from the ground and shook him as a cat would a mouse. At this moment Mr. Hill's large New Foundland dog came up and seized the bear which turned at once upon its new antagonist. The dog seemed to know just what was required, and kept up the engagement, seizing the bear whenever it made a start for Mr. Hill and then retreating a little way, pursued by the bear, until two were a hundred yards away. All this time, Mr. Hill's comrades, although they had heard his cry of "My God, he's got me!" had kept safely secreted behind brush and trees until the dog had led the bear away and the "coast was clear." They now came up to console him with words of sympathy and received such a lecture from the prostrate man, that the reverberations of his eloquence resounded, for ever so long, through the deep gulches and along the rocky hill sides. Mr. Hill was dangerously hurt, but they carried him to his cabin, and, being a man of iron constitution, he eventually recovered. The dark red lines are to day plainly visible on his side where the tasks of the monster plowed their way through the flesh. The next day a party of perhaps 20 men re-entered the thickets, hunted out the hiding place of the bear, and taking up their positions in oaks on different sides, brought him down with a score of shots. The grizzly weighed 900 lbs, and was evidently an old fellow. In one of his legs they found a copper ball, an ounce in weight, which had evidently been there many years, perhaps ever since the days when the trappers of the Hudson Bay Co. traversed this then wilderness land, and had so many thrilling adventures with wild beasts and wild men. For the verification of this story we take pleasure in referring our readers to H. C. Hill Esq., one of the city fathers of Ashland town.

HUNTING.—The snow storms on the summits of the Siskiyou and Cascades have driven the deer down into the low hills bordering the valley, and the hunters are having a rare time of it. We learn that W. C. Daley, E. J. Farlow, Henry Duncan, Gilbert Anderson, C. K. Klum, the tireless Coolidge and other nimrods have made numerous raids of late and have caused sad havoc among the mow-lick.
