

OREGON'S ADVANTAGES.

There is no State in the Union that combines within itself to so great a degree the many varied natural resources as does Oregon.

Turn to any section, Eastern, Western, or Southern, in Oregon, and we find natural resources—many of them in one section not having a counterpart in the others—nor utilized, although they would with capital, energy and concentrated action be made to pay a handsome income upon money invested.

The timber reserves of Oregon are difficult to give, even approximately. The coast, from the time the Southern boundary of the State is sighted by the mariner until the Columbia river is made, gives one the impression of an almost continuous forest.

By actual experiment it has been demonstrated beyond the question of a doubt, that the yellow fir of Oregon (in speaking of the timber of this State said remarks are equally applicable to that of Washington Territory) is superior in many respects, while in all others equal to the very best timber in the East for ship building purposes.
