

THE ASHLAND TIDINGS.

FRIDAY, MARCH 1, 1878.

LETTER FROM DARDANELLES.

DARDANELLES, OR., FEB. 18, 1878. ED. TIDINGS.—Since my last communication, it was reported that a venturesome Nimrod, who resides near the banks of Rogue River, was successful in killing a nice fat bear, the meat of which was very generously distributed; but a treacherous wheelbarrow tracked led an enquiring genius to the remains of a wild hog, and the discovery seemed to detract a little from the novelty of the hunt; but hunters, like men of other occupations are liable to their misfortunes; though it appears that this little difficulty might have been obviated by the use of due caution.

Wild ducks, near the river, have been very numerous since the late rains; they visit the grain fields in large flocks and are somewhat destructive—a good opportunity for practice with a long range shot-gun, but no other would be effective.

SPELLING SCHOOL

Seems to have become rather a mania in this section. The Levisden School House is filled to its utmost capacity nearly every Monday evening, with old and young, among whom are some excellent spellers. All meet socially and enjoy themselves; and I am pleased to say, that generally speaking, the best of order is maintained.

THAT "COMING EVENT"

Is anxiously looked for by many, but is still in the future. There are no weddings to report at present; some here are considerably exposed to the "matrimonial contagion." The boys of Dardanelles were discussing the propriety of organizing a debating society, but their last meeting adjourned sine die. That we regret very much, for who knows but in our midst might arise a modern Cicero.

Last week we noticed the first appearance of a political aspirant for some official honor, meandering around with a smiling countenance and a plumed hat. He looked as if he had just stepped upon the arena as a new recruit in the coming contest. Few valentines were circulated on the 14th; with us the time honored custom was partially laid aside. Not being a believer in myths, we place little confidence in the Woodchuck story, but think if that animal did act so foolishly as to meet his annual appointment, he found an unfavorable day for observation. The following morning,

THE SNOW

Covered the ground to the depth of two inches; a look at it suggested the question: where is the practical genius who substituted

A COW-SKIN FOR A SLEIGH?

Yet if all reports be true, I have to give the Rogue River girls credit for this invention. Now talk about your Ashland girls being "practical." The general health along the river is good.

The urchin who hid behind the gate post to scare the colt, can see very well out of his left eye. Very little farm work has been done since the late rains, but the miners are at work, and many are doing well. There is plenty of gold in this country, but it has a vast amount of dirt mixed with it. Mr. McDougal proposes, the coming summer, to turn the water of R. R. at the Big Bar, a short distance above the new bridge, and work the main channel. This is a difficult undertaking, but will no doubt prove a profitable one.

Geo. Fradenburg and Mill Horn, while crossing the river today, came very near meeting with a serious accident. They lost one ear and could not manage their frail boat with the other, but after floating down the swift current for some distance, they reached the shore in safety.

Prof Farley closed his school a few weeks ago and will leave us about the first of March, to take charge of the school at Sterling.

Rev. Martin of Roseburg, held a series of meetings at the school house, which ended on Sunday last.

A little merriment was excited last Sunday morning, in front of G. Karowski's store, by

A YOUNG HOPEFUL

Of Gaul's creek, who performed some interesting feats in questmanship. After the acts were concluded, he extricated himself from a deep mud-hole and proceeded to church, with the assurance that he had made his "mark in the world."

The windwork of putting up a FLOURING MILL At this place has been done by different parties, but nothing else. This place is surrounded by a large farming country, is accessible for teams at all times of the year, and contains an excellent water power, which will evidently, sooner or later, attract the attention of some man of means and enterprise. J. Q. L.

Marshfield, Mass. Feb. 14.—The mansion of Daniel Webster was burned early this morning.
