A Sudden Cure.

A melancholy woman lay
In sickness and in bed,
And, in a faint and broken voice,
To her sad husband said:
"Dear David, when my earthly form
Has aye to lit less clay,
O wait and weep a little while,
Nor throw your arms away."
"I know a woman, kind and true,
On whom you may depend;
O! marry Amy Will, I know—
She is my dearest friend."
"Yes, Hannah, I have wanted long
To speak of this before;
For Amy Will, I know, I
Have talked the matter o'er."
"Then you and Amy Will, I know
Have been too smart and sly;
I tell you, David Will, I know,
I'm not a going to die!"
Her dark eyes flashed; her strength returned;
She left her bed of pain;
A week had scarcely passed away
When she was well again.

SCRAPS OF SOUTHERN OREGON HISTORY.

Manacra at Port Orford in 1850.
No. 1.

In the beautiful harbor of Port Orford stand many picturesque rocks projecting high above the water, in towers and domes, of nature's own building. One of these rocks, standing so near the shore that it may be reached on foot during low tide, is possessed of much historical interest, being the scene of one of the earliest of those bloody adventures with Indians, for which Southern Oregon is so pre-eminently noted. It is known by the name of Battle Rock. It is near sixty feet above the level of the sea, and its summit can only be reached by one narrow pass. When the top is reached there is room for twenty or thirty men to stand. This rock, like all the rest in the harbor, is continually covered with innumerable flocks of sea-towls, of every description, that frequent the Pacific coast. The air at times is literally full with them. The flapping of their wings, their wild and varied screams, added to the husky crash of the waves, as they beat against the rocks, go to make up a scene truly grand and wild in the extreme.

But upon the summit of this rock was once a scene of terror enacted, of which the following account has been preserved, and will give some idea of the suffering of that brave crew, who fell victims to the heartless savages.

Early in the summer of 1851, when the spirit of adventure prevailed to the remotest corner of the United States, and especially the Pacific coast, consequent on the discovery of gold, expeditions of discovery were fitted out, both by sea and land. No undertaking was so perilous, which promised wild adventure, and a search for new lands or gold.

About this time a party of bold adventurers, numbering thirteen, including the captain and cabin boy, chartered a sloop and set out on an exploring voyage up the Oregon coast. When they arrived at the place now known as Port Orford, they were attracted by the beauty of the harbor and its surroundings, and at once entered the bay, let go the anchor, and their gallant little craft turned its prow to meet the ebbing tide. Soon the whole party, except the master and cabin boy, embarked in a small boat, and set out for land. A short run brought them to shore. After securing their boat, they made their way to the high ground some distance from the beach, and stopped to admire the great beauty of their new-found land. Gradually ascending back from the coast, the land was covered with dense forests of gigantic firs. In the near foreground, sprang from a soil untrampled by man, an exuberance of flowering shrubs and plants, excelled only in the tropics. They had scarcely time to realize the grand beauties of their surroundings, when, to their consternation, a savage yell from their rear broke on their ears. On looking back they discovered their boat in possession of the Indians, and that they were completely surrounded, and cut off from all retreat, by a horde of savages outnumbering their little band ten to one. Nor were they kept long in doubt as to

EDWARD VI.—A BOY'S COMPOSITION.

Henry VIII died one day with great success. He left three children who did not care to go with him. Their names were Mary, Elizabeth and Edward. The last was the 'El' of the family. He was a boy. His sisters were not. Their father also left a will. His will was stronger than all his children. By will, Earl Hertford was to be the state while Edward was young. He was only ten years young. Hertford loved the glass so much he became a tumbler and was called the Earl of Summerset. He wanted the king to take the queen of Scotland—but the trick was lost because the Scotch refused to assist. The Duke was called the Protector because he protected his own family and put everybody else away in the tower. The border men of England and Scotland were those who boarded on the frontier and bored each other almost to death; so they had a fight about Edward marrying the queen. The English attacked them by water, which they couldn't stand. History says that the Scotch loss was 10,000 and the English 200. History lies, probably. The government told the people what to believe. If they did as they were told they must pay taxes to support their belief. If they didn't do so they were roasted. Things were red hot. Somebody told stories about the Protector and so he was taken to the tower and had his head chopped off. It was not much of a head, but he hated to part with it. Then there was a rising of the common people, but they did not know what for. Most of them got raised on to trees with ropes around their necks. Some very fat men were burned, thus making light of their complaints. Now I guess it is time for the little king to die. He was only sixteen when he gave up the crown and the ghost. England is not yet done, so I cannot finish this history yet.

FROM LAKE VIEW.

June 29th, 1878.

EDITOR TIDINGS—If there is anything in this letter not before reported to you, it is at your service. So far as our personal safety is concerned, I believe we are as safe here as we would be in Ashland. Some view the matter differently and are consequently more or less exercised in mind. Much talk and needless among the people in this section in anticipation of Indian troubles. Many people have left their homes and come to town and are now camped on the common. So far as I know, no hostile Indians have been seen in this neighborhood. Most of the people I believe have left Warner valley, and there is a report to the effect that some of the houses and buildings on the east side of Warner lake (farther side from here) have been burned, since they were abandoned by their owners. Several of the fugitives after camping out in the rain a day or two, have concluded to return to their respective homes and fight it out on that line if necessary, in preference to roughing it in camp.

The following extracts is from a letter written from Bonanza, under date of June 29th, in reference to the "big scare" that occurred there recently:

Our little town is in a fevered state of excitement. Work has stopped and many are fortifying. An old squaw, one who has formed an alliance with a white man, came in and reported that the Klamaths and Modocs were preparing for an outbreak, and that they would kill women and children, burn houses and drive every white man from the land.

A post scrip to the letter furnished the following further information: We have learned exactly what the squaw did say. She came to some men in the woods and told them Nicu hias tica muk-a-muck. One man in the company, who claimed to understand her, informed his companions that it meant war. The consequence was a rush for Bonanza and a general scare.

One of the highest compliments Edward Booth ever received was paid him by an old negro woman, a family servant, who went to see a performance of "Richard III" during Booth's visit to Savannah. Giving her impressions of the play to her mistress next day, she expressed the greatest concern for the health of the actor. "Poor old man," said she, "he can't last long; dat oonah will carry him to his grave, esah!"

Bonanza Items.

June 27th.

Items are very plentiful just now. Everybody is scared over the Indian excitement. All families have left Sprague River, and several Lost River families have gone off on a visit—at least I expect that is their business, although some of them left very suddenly. Some of the settlers are pretty badly scared, but I don't know which is most scared, the whites or Indians. One man was in such a hurry to go visiting that he tried to load his mowing machine into the wagon, but could not. Indian or no Indian, we are bound to have our 4th of July celebration. I noticed a piece in the Tidings, a short time ago from itemizer Milton, stating that certain parties were going to move a saw mill to Washington Territory. If we do so, I will let Milton know in time. Talk of the women of the Revolutionary war! You ought to have been in Bonanza during the excitement. One nice looking young man was guarded for a week by three young ladies and still expects to live, at least until the 4th of July.
