

THE ASHLAND TIDINGS

FRIDAY, JANUARY 24, 1873
QUITE A DIFFERENCE

Innuendoes against members of the investigating committee have been very common and numerous in certain newspapers of the state...

DEAR GENERAL: Please inform me as to the rank of Bellinger and Thompson. Are they full Colonels or Lieut. Colonels?

Gen. Ross' order to give the officers time in which to settle up the business of their offices is very different from a proposition to make false returns...

If Congress had the spunk and legislative capacity of a doll-party, the Springfield Republican remarks, it would drop Mr. Sherman's petty bill of items into the waste basket...

The story of the Oregon frauds is already quite familiar to the people of the eastern states, and the Philadelphia Times has the following concerning it:

France, one of the most prosperous nations on the globe, will need thousands of bushels of wheat to make up the deficiencies of her harvest...

The Galveston News sarcastically remarks that "a Congressman is a gentleman sent away on to Washington for the good of his own State."

INDEPENDENCE.

We clip the following from this week's Sentinel: The ASHLAND TIDINGS, accused by the Times of being a party organ like unto the Sentinel...

The S. F. Examiner says: "The burden which weighs most heavily upon the people of California is excessive taxation. The present year's assessment is about the same as the average of several which have preceded it..."

The Hartford Post says: One objection to Mr. Edmunds' Electoral Bill is that it fixes the Presidential election on the first Tuesday in October...

The present Legislature of the state of New York is occupying the new capitol, on which $9,500,000 have already been expended. Several millions more will be required to complete it...

As an example of the way some people look at it—people who doubtless have their own good reasons—we clip the following from a communication published in the Salem Statesman:

Michigan and Illinois rank as among the first of western states having little or no state debt to pay. Illinois has for years been virtually out of debt...

James W. Quick was a county treasurer in Pennsylvania, and the day his term of office expired he displayed such quickness in getting out of the country...

The Philadelphia Times says: General Butler still remains away from Washington. Meanwhile congress has done more work and less deviltry in two weeks and a half than in any similar period since Butler was discovered.

The Baltimore Gazette says: Senator Sharon's continued absence from Washington creates the sickening thought that perhaps one end of Nevada has succeeded. This should be investigated.

Manton Marble says "he never reads the New York Tribune" No? Well that is just where the Tribune has you, good Manton, and your master, too.

A Pennsylvania sheriff has been convicted of buying votes, and yet our Col. Forney distinctly remembers when Simon Cameron beat him for the United States Senate by this plan.

It is hinted by Gen. Grant's friends that if he is made Field Marshal with a salary of $50,000 a year, he will not be in the way of other Republican aspirants for the Presidency.

Among the gravestones of the passing year, remarks the Boston Transcript, must be raised one to civil service reform.

BALLAD.

The bright orb of day o'er the willow beamed As we charged on the foe, like a whirlwind resolved, Our rifles rang loudly, our bright bayonets gleamed, As the might of the red man for ever we craved.

Flint and bidding and our leader we called, The roll being called each one answered to name, Then on the plain with face dim, and pallid, L. J. one who we first saw near our camp.

FOR KAMAZU, JAN. 15, 1873. C. S.

A THOROUGH-BRED LION.

A correspondent of the Eugene City Journal writing under date of the 31st ult., says:

"While visiting the Coyote hills, I called on Dr. Canada, he and his brother John had just returned from a six hours hunt, and for their pains they brought with them a thoroughbred lion, such as was never seen in this country before. It is a huge male beast—16 feet from the end of its tail to the tip of its nose, and stands 32 1/2 inches high, and its mane is 5 inches long. It has a tuft or bunch of hair on the end of its tail very much resembling that of the African lion. Allow me to inform you and your readers that it was no child's play to capture this King of the hills. The doctor and John had hunted three hours for deer when their shots had been plenty, but could find nothing but tracks that seemed to be running in every direction; finally they came to a jungle and John stepped upon a large log to survey the surrounding country, when all of a sudden the lion made a tremendous bound of about 30 feet, barely missing him, passed on to the doctor, taking away the entire rear part of his pants and about one-half of his coat. I assure you for five minutes the battle was fierce and wild, and had it not been for the timely arrival of Charlie Moore and his three dogs, would have been decidedly in the lion's favor. Immediately on his arrival the doctor's favorite blood hound caught the lion by the throat, while the other dogs caught him by the legs, side, back, tail or any other place that was convenient. While the beast was thus engaged, Charlie Moore, as quick as thought, thrust a bowie knife through its heart, thus ending one of the fiercest battles ever fought by man and lion in Oregon."

THE COLUMBIA RIVER.

[From the Virginia (Nev.) Enterprise.] In many respects the Columbia river is the grandest on the continent. Fourteen hundred miles above its mouth it is as large as the Sacramento river at Rio Vista, and flows to the sea with increasing grandeur all the way. Where it flows through the Cascades, a new and gorgeous picture is painted every moment, and after the mountains are passed, it sweeps in perfect purity and with immense volume to the sea. It is watched over by the most magnificent mountains in the union, and where the river joins the ocean there is an everlasting war of waters, which is as beautiful as it is terrible. By and by, when communication with Oregon is cheap and comfortable, people will cease to go to Europe in the summer, but will seek the Cascades of the Columbia, and, as they watch, will grow to be better Americans as they more fully realize the claims which their native land has upon their admiration. The Mississippi has greater volume than the Oregon; (this is a mistake; the volume of the Columbia is actually greater than that of the Mississippi—Ed. Oregonian) the Hudson makes rival pictures which perhaps are as beautiful as any painted in the Cascades, but there is a power, a beauty, a purity and a wildness about the river of the west which is altogether its own and which is all most unapproachable in its charms.

A Dark Picture.

A dispatch from London to the Chicago Times of Jan. 17th, says concerning the labor troubles in England: "The distress increases, and with it the masters continue to decrease wages, the men standing out. The men are bitter. They have a lesson to learn before they understand that trade is leaving this country. American long clothes, cheaper and better than the English article, are sold in all the large drapery stores in London. This single example of the utter futility of the struggle against the new condition of things might impress the workmen, if the politicians did not tell them that the policy of the present government stopped the mills and brought starvation to their doors. While flags were flying over the American banks on resumption day, the black flag of poverty dominated the manufacturing districts of England. The hungry, despairing crowd in its shadow increases daily, crying for bread."

IN A SEA OF ICE.

It is stated by captains of whalers now in port that prior to their departure from the Arctic regions in the latter part of October, they were told by some natives that a Russian man-of-war was blocked in a night above East Cape. Having lately been informed that no war vessel of that nation was in that region, they have concluded the ship in question to be the larger of the Swedish polar expedition. The report at a settlement on September 23d, of the Lena, the smaller vessel, that her companion ship had proceeded eastward tends to strengthen the above conclusion.—San Francisco Chronicle.

FROZEN TO DEATH.

The Pendleton Independent, of the 9th inst., says: "One day last week a Scotchman named John Ross was frozen to death near Milton. It seems this unfortunate man, who was a shoemaker by trade, and had been at work in Walla Walla, left that city intending to walk to Wild Horse to visit some friends living there, when, it is thought, he lost his way and wandered around until tired and laid down and froze to death. About $60 in money and notes, and certificates of deposit to the amount of $900 was found on his person. Deceased was an intelligent man and much respected in the community where he lived."
