Let a political ring once obtain control of a government, state, munincipal, county, or any other in which there is chance for the officers to steal from the public purse, and it will cling like the Old Man of the Island to the neck of Sinbad, choking the people upon whom it rides with oppressive taxation and insultingly vanting its power and tyranny over the out raged citizen. Frequently fastening itself upon both political parties, if they are anything like equal in power, it controls nominations and plays upon the ignorant or careless voter to an extent undreamed of until a chance exposure or a wholsome "investigation" reveals its hidden workings. It buys exchanges and controls by bulldozing force the votes of delegates at nominating conventions. It is the cancerous virus of the body politic which reveals itself in the disgraceful blots that disfigure the records of all parties, and furnish the material for most of the campaign abuse that demagogues, office seekers and party hirelings heap upon "the other party." It foists upon the people slaughtered if they could increase triendship; who adjures sell when he officers of no reputation or of a reputation worse than none, and laughs at the efforts of the sagacious voter to elect honorable men that the people want the Indians The greed that has characterized the place, and respectfully asks the patronag of to office.
