[uo27v2:f] camped at Peavine on the mountain, however, and attributed the failure of Lewis and his scouts to discover them to the simple fact that they had not looked in the right place. So Capt Mike Bushy was ordered to take fifteen men and see if he could find the enemy. He declared that it would be easy to do, but the trouble would be to bring back the news. He demurred against starting out with so few men in open daylight, as this would give the Indians the advantage, and proposed if they would allow him to wait until dark to report the position of the redskins in two days. But the orders were imperative to start in an hour. I was chosen as one of the party, and about 10 o'clock A. M. we started out in a drenching rain varied with intervals of snowing. I cannot remember the names of all the party, but they were the picked men of the company, all willing to go anywhere that Mike would lead, having all confidence in their captain and in each other. Their route led down the mountain to the river, and down the left bank of the river. After they had gone some distance down the river, each on the sharp lookout for anything that might aid them in the errand upon which they were sent, Alex. Watts called to Capt. Bushey and pointed out to him some signs in the sand which convinced them beyond a doubt that there were Indians only a short distance ahead carrying the news of our expedition to the ludian camp. Mike laughed and said, "Just as I expected; we'll find the Indians, and they'll find us about Friday evening at 8 o'clock P. M. Brothers and the same time. But that's what we sisters in good standing are cordially invited to at- are here for, and we'll find them if Old John and all the rest are in the bunch. Mr. J. S. EUBANES, Sr., W. C. T., So we paddled along, making as good time as we could, occasionally seeing the trail of the two Indian runners, but unable to catch a glimpse of them, until after dark. Keeping on in the Holds their stated communications Thursday even darkness, we came to the large bar above the Little Meadows, which contains about eighty acres of level land. Here we found a large Indian camp, with a few horses scattered about, but no Indians. About two miles back one of our men had become separated from the rest of the party and had failed to rejoin us. Near the place we last saw E DE PEAT, N. G., him a bright fire was bluzing in full view of all the surrounding country. Mike expressed astonishment that Tenessee should build a fire there, of all places; but Hank Jones, Gabe Williams and Alex. Watts, all old hands at the business, said "signal fire," with which opinion the Capt. was inclined to agree. As he was very tired, he requested Alex Watts, Seth Smith and Jake Miller to go up the river toward the fire and find the lost man if they could, but to be governed by the greatest caution, while he and the rest would go into a small gulch near and await their return.

The turee men struck out in the dark ness and in due time reached the spot eral times, but received no acswer, so they returned to the bar. Just as they the bar Watts, who was ahead, noticed some one abreast of bim about ten paces distant on the side of the hill.
