The grand ovation given to Grant at San Francisco was apparently entirely free from political feeling or purpose, eminent men of all parties joining heartily in the reception. The enthusiasm of the welcome is owing chiefly, perhaps, to the recognition of Grant's services as a soldier, but it is also, no doubt, largely a reflex or emulation of the honors showered upon him abroad. In most of the nations through which he has passed our political differences are little known and less cared for; Grant was recognized as one upon whom Columbia had bestowed her highest honors, one to whose services in a dark hour is owing in great measure her present existence as a nation, and the attentions shown him sprang from the respect and regard felt for the government and people of the United States. To have allowed him to return home without any demonstrations whatever would have seemed almost a discourteous reception of the friendly spirit ridge's Marble Works of Roseburg, I will receive manifested by the many nations in their reception of Grant. The Portlanders are preparing to receive him some day next week, his arrival being expected about the 16th.

It is cinity that they have purchased of Mrs. D. H. Jones expected that the work may be ber entire stock of continued through the winter without interruption, and it is declared by the officers of the company that the steady eastward progress of the road is not to be stopped until the tracks from east and west meet in Montana. Gen. Sprague Superintendent of the Pacific Division, says the road will be complete within four years.

A school system, remarks the Philadelphia Record, that sharpens the wits and softens the hands of the pupils will revenge itsels upon its promoters. The country is getting full of young men and women of fair education who find it impossible to support themselves. While education should by no means be neglected, it should be given a practical turn. No man is well educted who does not know what to do with his mands."
