He is reported as saying further that he favored the nomination of Crant for the presidency because Grant is a "strong man," and would rule with a firm hand. This coming in such close connection with what we have reported above of his deliverances, conveys the impression that he would have it aderstood that he believes Grant to sympathise with his own views of a strong government—strong to enrich the wealthy and to oppress the poor. In this instance, tirant might well offer the oft-quotod prayer: "Deliver me from my tiends," who go about making bols of themselves with their mouths.
