meeting of the State Horticultural Society of California in San Francisco last Friday the subject of the curl fungus and and the summit is in better condition milder of peach trees was under discust this summer than it ever has been besion. It was stated that a cold, wet fore spring is most favorable to the growth of the fungus. Old trees are more easily affected than young ones-the older the tree the worse the curl. In some varieties of trees the structure of the leaf renders it very difficult for the disease to affect them, and it is found that the sweet, hard-shell almond is entirely free from the curled leaf under any condition. In many places these trees are being used for stocks upon which to graft the peach. The white varieties of the peach are more subject to the curl than the yellow. The varieties freest from curl are said to be the Alexander, Early Susquehanna, St. John, Solway, Crawford's Early and Jones' seedling. Professor Dwinelle said that a solution of bluestone, a teaspoon of the mineral to a bucket of water, applied to the roots of the trees would prevent the white mildew | $6 and $8. from attacking them. appear to have conspired to offer Ashtants each, and Ashland does not appear in the list. We find Jacksonville, Roseburg, Canyon City, and other towns down to Union (with only 419 inhabitants) but no such place as Ashland is mentioned. The reason assigned for the omission is that the enumerator failed to keep a distinct record of those living within the corporate limits of the town. It seems rather odd that our town should be the only one in the state thus neglected. We are inclined to the opinion that Ashland has been presumptuous in growing so fast since the last census, and it is thought necessary to give her a marked and noticeable rebuke. We have no doubt, gentlemen of the census, that she will see the error of her way and stop growing at once. To the best of our recollection, the enumerator, reported in Jacksonville that our population numbered about 950. This was probably not deemed accurate enough for comparison reached the falls, and the next two or three hours were spent in "drinking in" the scenery, as the Boston blue stockings would observe. At the cataracts Fall creek carries at this time nearly twice as much water as is now running under the bridge in Ashland. There are two falls, about a quarter of a mile apart. The upper one is over a precipice about 100 feet in height, and the fall may be called unbroken, although the wall of the precipice over which the water falls is not quite vertical, and the rocks, without revealing themselves, keep the water churned into a white mass from the top to the bottom. The lower falls consist of two cascades, each of which is nearly 100 feet in height, and in each of which there are two or three benches or divisions From the foot of the upper cascade to the top of the lower is fifteen or twenty yards. The lower falls are much the more extensive and imposing. The road leading from Cottonwood to Pervis' on the Linkville road passes within half a mile of the falls just this side of Klamath river, and a person coming this way may catch a glimpse of them from the road, but, as they are almost hidden by the canyon walls and rocks, can gain no idea of their extent and grandeur. The whole country within view from a mountain standpoint above the falls presents a scene of wild grandeur that would well repay a visit, even if the falls were not there. Jenny creek and Fall creek both cut through deep, rocky canyons as they approach the Klamath river, and high walls and ridges of loose, naked rocks rise like parapets and battlements on all sides. A mile or two to the southward the Klamath cleaves its way through the mountains, its canyon valley visible for miles. Directly across the river the mountains rise, ridge after ridge, until an even crest line is formed lifting the horizon high among the clouds, and then towering magnificently above all Mount Shasta glistens in the heavens. After "taking it all in," we returned to John Greeve's place, about two and a half miles on the homeward way, and stopped all night. Mr. Greeve has the finest mountain farm in the country, and has followed the dairying business for several years with good success. He has about 75 acres of rich meadow land, so nearly level that a single plow furrow will carry water over it in almost any direction for irrigation. A large portion of this has been seeded with timothy, Wagons, Buggies, Wheel-barrows, Etc. and produces the best of hay. The great charm and value of the place is in the water. Copious springs, clear, cold and perennial, issue from the ground in such number and with such a volume of water that a large creek is formed by their confluence before they pass the confines of the farm. Upon one of these, within a few steps of the dwelling house, a milk house is built, and to its advantages may be attributed, perhaps, the secret of the MAIN ST., ASHLAND, OREGON, excellence of the butter which Mrs. Greeve sends to market. There are four brothers Greeve living on Fall creek, Jenny creek and Kean creek, three of ON MAIN STREET, ON THE SITE OF HIS OLD SHOP whom are still unmarried. We make this announcement in the hope that some damsels who have been waiting for leap year chances may be induced to visit the falls and enjoy the mountain scenery.
